Bob had never seen such naked tragedy. He felt himself relaxing limply against the jamb of the doorway, through which he had barely stepped. Jim, on rigid limbs, moved stiffly toward a dark door. The sepulchral silence of this outer room seemed a hallowed measure for that inner one. The doctor, knowing full well the devastating menace of such a pent up flood of emotion, shook Jim as if in an effort to break loose the key log of his emotions.

"Come, Jim, my lad—don't—don't——"

But even the professional witness to grief realized the futility of words, here and now, and forebore. Jim had neither heard nor felt.

For a long, long time these four—doctor and minister, nurse and hobo—stared toward the unsoluble darkness of the door to that room wherein was entombed life and love, hope and happiness. No sound came from this first and last meeting of living death and dead life; no sound to relieve the anxiety of the doctor, wise in such crises, or of the woman, who held in her arms the restless, wriggling, living cost of the sacrifice. The doctor said at length:

"He must break, and cry—or he, too, will go."

The silence became so oppressive that the slow and tense breathing of the four adults, the fretting of the newborn, the unduly hurried ticking of a mantel clock somewhere, the rasping whisper of the gas-jet, and, like a mourner's dirge, the vague murmurings of the shut-out tempest only seemed to make it more tangibly real and intense; it was a breathing, curiously alert silence.

Bob never knew how long that wait—that silence—that frightened tableau of watchers endured. It might have been a minute or an hour, but it was unfadingly inked in the white memory cells of his mind with the indelibility of dustless eternity.

Slow, infirm steps—and Jim emerged from the dark tomb. The lines of his agony had set dry and hard on his face; his dully bright eyes stared straight ahead seeing nothing—or, at least, nothing that was within the ken of those who watched him. So oblivious was he to external impressions that he did not even blink in the sharp change from the blackness of the room of death to the brightness of this room of new life. He walked toward the outer door and the storm.

The Doctor, with the kindly ignorance and blundering physhology of his class, to whom grief is a generic thing, to be met and humored and broken thus and so, said, "Come, Jim," slipping an arm around the young man's shoulders with the fatherly license of a life-long healer and friend, "come—my boy——" Then adding lamely, inwardly baffled by the insufficiency of his power of suggestion, "It can't be helped—there's nothing to be done. Cry, now—have a good cry—it will do you good!"

Jim did not even know to shake the restraining arm off. He merely walked unheeding, from under it.

The minister stepped after him with gingery softness, and said monotonously, "Why not try prayer, my son—seek your comfort and solace in the final hope of all those who grieve——"

"Go to hell!" he said in a low, thin tone, and walked on, as if he had neither heard nor spoken. To Bob, as a disinterested observer, it appeared that the minister's quick discomfiture grew out of ruffled pride in his own sense of weakness, rather than sympathetic feeling for Jim.

Bob felt himself an audience to a shadow drama. Here was life bared to its essentials; here was a tiny hinterland parlor transformed into a tragic stage.

Last, urged by instincts developed in the lore and tradition of her sex that told her the canny thing to do in such a case, Mrs. O'Leary imposed her matronly bulk in Jim's way and held out to h... his new-... "... little one, Jimmy——" she said tremulously.

Jim automatically received the infant into his outstretched hands, and a concerted sigh announced the belief of the professional watchers that surcease for Jim was at hand. Bob, however, seeing in Jim's face a dull insensibility of what he was doing, was not fooled. It was well that he had not been, for with the others temporarily off guard there would have been a hideous ante-climax to the tragedy.

For Jim, with a sudden snarled curse as he realized that he was holding the baby—the hateful price of a faded rose—raised it do dash it to the floor. Bob was barely quick enough to snatch the infant from its peril.

Then Jim, with a dry, insane laugh that raised brittle echoes in the room, disappeared out into the night.

"He must be followed," cried the Doctor, "or he may harm himself!"

"He must!" agreed the robust minister.

Bob pushed the infant back against the ample bosom of Mrs. O'Leary.

"I was thinking of that," he said quietly to the Doctor. "I'll take care of him!"

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

HERE'S AN OLD TEST TO DETERMINE HEALTH

How long can you hold your breath? At a recent convention of tuberculosis experts, one of the speakers called attention to an old test of health. This doctor said, "Business men and others who have not the ability to hold their breath for at least thirty seconds after taking a deep breath, should go and see a doctor at once."

It is surprising how little attention we give the breathing. For years I have preached the importance of deep breathing. There cannot be proper assimilation of food without an abundance of oxygen. There cannot be an abundance of oxygen without deep breathing.

The doctor I have quoted said, "If you catch your breath and hold it while breathing normally, you should be able to hold it twenty or thirty seconds if your health condition is normal." Try your own ability and see if your lung capacity is anywhere near what it should be.

This is an old test, as I have said. The old time doctors made use of it. In certain industrial plants it is one of the methods employed to make a speedy test of the fitness and endurance of the applicant for work.

Many a child is undeveloped and many a grown person is flat chested and poorly nourished because of the lack of lung use. A girl who has regular features and all the makings of beauty may be most unattractive because she is scrawny and frail. She may eat a lot and still be thin. Seven times out of ten this girl does not know how to breathe.

When I have occasion to talk health to a poorly nourished person, I invariably ask him to blow at a curtain, a plant, or some freely movable object. It is positively laughable to note the result. A sudden little puff is the best he can do.

Of course the blowing is of no consequence. But you cannot blow hard unless the lungs are full. A prolonged, sustained, even discharge of air from the lips is possible only when the lungs are deeply and fully filled.

Deep breathing should be practiced by everybody, every day. When you can and do fill the lungs all the time you will be surprised at the improvement of your general health and vigor.

Redness of the lips, pinkness of the cheeks and firmness of the flesh are promoted by deep breathing.

Clearness of the skin is another reward.

We have a lot of reserve lung tissue. There are air cells which are never opened. There is no better undertaking than to open and exercise these cells.

Tuberculosis is frequently the punishment for neglect of the lungs. If you practice deep breathing of pure air, your chances of escaping tuberculosis grow better and better every day.

But that isn't all—not only will you escape tuberculosis, but you will build up a body so resistant to disease that you will rarely be ill. Good lungs, made so by sensible use of them, will keep the doctor away.

Thousands Have Banished Gray Hair with this Clean, Colorless Liquid

Make a Test of Kolor-Bak Today

People everywhere praise Kolor-Bak for its remarkable power to banish grayness. The results are really astonishing, for no matter what the original shade was, it quickly reappears when this clean, colorless liquid is used.

Results appear quickly—often in a week. Kolor-Bak is the most satisfactory substitute for the natural pigmentation. It also removes dandruff, stops itching of the scalp and keeps the hair from falling out.

"My Hair Was Quite Gray"

"Only a few days ago my hair was quite gray. It was falling out, too. My wife bought me a bottle of Kolor-Bak and I am delighted with the results. Now my hair is as dark as ever and I am not losing any more. I am 70 years of age." (A typical letter)

If your hair has turned or is turning, do what thousands of others have done—let Kolor-Bak make your grayness a thing of the past. No need to supply samples of your hair as this one clean, colorless liquid is effective on any gray hair. Just ask for a bottle of Kolor-Bak. SUGGESTIONS FOR SOLVING CROSS-WORD PUZZLES

Start out by filling in the words of which you feel reasonably sure. These will give you a clue to other words crossing them, and they in turn to still others. A letter belongs in each white space, words starting at the numbered squares and running either horizontally or vertically or both.

The solution will appear in to-morrow's paper.

WEDDING BELLS.

NOAKES—POLLOCK.

All Saints' Church, Peterboro, was the scene of a very attractive wedding on Monday afternoon, when Elizabeth Muir, daughter of the late Robert Pollock, of Scotland, and Mrs. T. Y. Logan, of New Jersey, U.S.A., was united in marriage to Henry, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Noakes of Peterboro. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. D. Paterson.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. John McPhate, looked very charming attired in a white crepe de chine with veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of roses and carnations. Her attendant, Miss Lillian Noakes, sister of the groom, looked very pretty gowned in shell pink black picture hat, shoes and stockings to match. Mr. Noakes was supported by Mr. George Logan, cousin of the bride.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold wristlet watch; to thre bridesmaid, a rope of pearls, and to the best man, a pair of white gold cuff links.

Immediately after the ceremony a reception and supper was held at the home of the groom's parents.

JAMES D. CUNNINGHAM
Ottawa

Referring to the death last week of James D. Cunningham of Ottawa, whose wife, Miss Aileen Primeau, is a daughter of J. J. Primeau of Ashburnham and sister of Mrs. Leo Cleary of this city, the "Ottawa Journal" says:

"Word was received here of the sudden death in New York city of Mr. James Dennis Cunningham, a director of the firms of R. Stewart Son and Cunningham, and of Larmonth and Cunningham, insurance auditors and accountants, Laurentian Building. Mr. Cunningham was one of the best known young business men in the city and his death will cause deep regret in business circles.

"Feeling ill for some time Mr. Cunningham three weeks ago decided to go to New York for special treatment. He was undergoing this when death came. Mrs Cunningham was with him at the time. His home was at 421 Laurier avenue, west.

"Mr. Cunningham was born at South March 38 years ago. He joined his present business associates 20 years ago and gradually had risen to a responsible place in the business life of the city. As well as being a director of the two firms mentioned above, he was a director of the firm of Harris, Barry and Luke and the Weldon Court Realty Company. For many years Mr. Cunningham was a member of the Laurentian Club and also a popular member of Ottawa, Council, Knights of Columbus.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

who has, under his own skillful guidance and that of the many highly paid officials subordinate to him, once again shown his ability as a railway chief executive.

The fact nevertheless remains, in spite of the marked increase in efficiency of our railways, that competition has almost reached a bursting point and some compromise should be made. Duplication of tracks must be eliminated—Canadian National in some cases and Canadian Pacific in others, leaving only the track which is most advantageous.

Take for example the lakeshore lines from Montreal to Toronto of these two roads where one can see daily races between trains seldom, excluding holidays, carrying half their complement of passengers. That it is ridiculous all will agree and because this "National joke" is allowed to be repeated from the East to the Pacific seaboard the taxpayers are burdened and legitimate industrial enterprise is almost strangled.

TARIFF—We are now assured that a permanent tariff board will be formed if the present government is returned to power, but our Premier makes himself clearly understood by stating that he believes in protective tariff for revenue purposes only. How can this be protective? Furthermore, if the government does not believe in a tariff for the protection of our industries, will not the electorate be expecting too much of them to advocate in Parliament any radical changes along these lines which an unbiased, properly constituted and well advised tariff board would suggest.

The tariff issue has undoubtedly for purely political purposes, been entirely misrepresented and the sooner our work people reason it out for themselves the better it will be for them. For example, the immense foreign trade which Great Britain enjoyed before the war was largely due to the protecting of her industries even to the forbidding in the early days, of trade secrets and machinery leaving her shores. Then followed the period of free trade for no other purpose than to enjoy free entry of her produce into the many markets of the world, but the loss of many of those markets primarily due to the war and also with advance of organised industry in those countries she now finds herself compelled to resort to protection to safeguard her home markets.

There are those who will argue that Canada is an agricultural country because her vast prairies and fertile plains were intended for no other purpose but what of her mineral wealth, her water power, her chemical resources, or her enormous timber reserves are all of these for nought or to be exported just so that we and our children may till the soil The Canadian farmers' most potential market exists right at home where, even under existing industrial conditions, the major portion of their produce is consumed and this all important feature is often misrepresented thus making it possible for it not to be appreciated as it might be.

Since it is quite evident that Britain will look to Canada to help her, and rightly so, in absorbing many of her sons and daughters who are totally unsuited for agricultural employment, is it not fair to assist organised industry in some measure by giving it adequate protection and finding these artisans constant employment. The benefit derived would be mutual, for the farmers' markets would increase bringing him greater returns and incidentally our railways would benefit without, by the increased trade and passenger traffic.

We are told that many of our factories are already overmanned and over equipped, but this would not be the case of in many sections of trade they were permitted to manufacture even one half of the goods imported. Politically our customs tariff has been grossly misrepresented and it is time that we reasoned it out for ourselves from a logical viewpoint only.

SENATE—Our senate has been abused for some time and possibly its power may need curtailing but we must not allow ourselves to be mis-led by all of the political claptrap to which we are subjected. Do not let us overlook the fact that amongst the majority of its members are many of our most learned scholars and statesmen who have given their country years of faithful service and who, with but very few exceptions, debate on bills sent up from the lower house only from the viewpoint of statesmen seasoned by years of experience.

These three issues are therefore very clear and the most unenlightened voter should not experience much difficulty in deciding for himself but let him be guarded against misrepresentation, false promises and the many other forms of political campaigning resorted to by those less scrupulous than others. A prevalent form of political misstatement is to insinuate by the use of ambiguous phraseology that the platform advocated by the manufacturers or employers of labor is not the platform for the working man or the farmer for that matter. In this lies one of our greatest obstacles towards progress and prosperity. Do not be led into the belief that a good tariff will benefit only the employer. That would be unreasonable, for the employer desires nothing more than to operate his machinery to capacity with a fair profit to himself, thus enabling him to provide his workers with constant employment and to pay them good wages.

The opportunity is now at hand to express your desire through the medium of the ballot and we should therefore ask ourselves these questions:

(1) Am I in favour of the present tariff with the prospect of still further reductions and prepare myself for migration to some other country in order that I may manufacture the goods which my country must have.

or

(2) Am I in favour of a higher tariff and thus ensure myself of constant employment AT HOME.

Yours Truly

DYNAMITE IN FIRE BOX OF THRESHER

Grates Blown Out When Fire Started.

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 10. — (Canadian Press.)—The placing of a stick of dynamite under the fire box of a boiler of a threshing outfit owned by W. J. Moore, of Kitley township, has led County Crown Attorney M. M. Brown and Provincial Police to make an investigation. The following morning a son of Mr. Moore started a fire under the boiler when an explosion followed and the grates were blown out. No steam had been raised and to this is attributed the fact that more damage did not result. The identity of the guilty party or parties is unknown.

EFFICIENCY OF PUBLIC UTILITIES PRAISED BY OSHAWA ALDERMEN

Committee Which Visited Peterboro Last Week Was Impressed by Management.

VIEWING CITIES

Members Hope to Gain Information of Value in Solving Oshawa's Problems.

Last week the Board of Works committee of the Oshawa City Council visited Peterborough on a tour of inspection of the municipal utilities and the Oshawa Telegram whose publisher, O. M. Alger, is giving great praise to the management and efficiency of all the city departments.

"On Wednesday the Board of Works Committee of the City Council along with Mayor Schell, City Engineer Smith and Superintendent A. E. Colving of the department paid a visit of inspection to the city of Peterborough.

The Committee is composed of the following gentlemen, R. D. Preston, (chairman); E. L. Vickery, Geo. T. Morris, O. M. Alger and O. R. Burns. Ald. Hart also accompanied them. All the members of the committee except Ald. Vickery, who was out of the city, made the trip.

For some time the members of the committee have felt that they could enlarge their vision as citizens and increase their usefulness and efficiency as public servants by making visits of inspection to other progressive towns and cities that lie all about us. No community can make any special or noteworthy progress by fixing its centre of vision within the limits of its own area. It must lift its eyes to the hills and the higher and farther away these may be the better.

The cities that are in the front line to-day are those that have taken advantage of the successes and failures of other cities.

For some time several of our civic legislators have suggested that we go and see for ourselves how other people are solving the problems that we in this city have to deal with. It is often difficult for a number of busy business men to be away from their regular business at the same time, but they should do so occasionally at least; they will be the better personally and the city will also be materially benefitted.

This committee was given a splendid recention by Mayor Turner, Alderman, chairman of the Board of Works and Chief Gimblet of the Fire Department, also City Engineer Parsons.

Clean Streets

The committee had heard much about the method of street cleaning adopted by the lift-lock city, so the first thing they saw was the big street cleaner in operation. It is really a big electric sweeper. A steel revolving brush operates upon the street surfaces loosening any refuse materials or dirt which is drawn into a large refuse reservoir.

The sweeper does its work well. It not only takes up all refuse from the street surface but collects the dust as well. It is so regulated in its operation that it is practically noiseless and dustless. The machine apparently is a practical solution of the dust nuisance and from what we gathered, every merchant and business man acknowledges its usefulness in keeping his store clean and the citizens generally endorse its practical value. The committee was highly impressed with the machine and believes that were the city in a position to purchase such a machine to advantage that it would solve the street cleaning problem of this city.

Fire Fighting Equipment

The Mayor rang in a fire alarm at a point fully a mile from the fire hall and within the space of 3 1-2 minutes a fire truck with five men was on the spot, Chief Gimblet having arrived in his official car well in advance and in another half minute, the ladder truck drawn by a team was at the scene.

The call was rung in in the ordinary way and had not been prearranged. Peterboro's fire fighting force consists of 20 paid men under the chief, ten men on day service and ten for night.

Chief Gimblet appears to be the right man for the job. Everthing about the fire hall is in first class order and condition and the men give every evidence of being capable to render efficient service to the city.

The City's Water Works

A visit was paid to the pumping station and reservoir of the water works department. The city is to be congratulated on having such a fine waterworks system.

The pumping station is a credit to the city. It has several fine big pumps almost any one of which, if necessity arose, could pump sufficient water daily to supply the city. The city uses about 3 millions of gallons daily. The pumps, however are not forced and thereby their life is prolonged and the service goes right along without any stops for breaks, etc.

The pumping equipment for the city is sufficient for a city of three times the size of Peterboro and its capacity and splendid condition are due to the keen business foresight and good judgment of the men who built it. They looked ahead and with out much additional cost they built for the future, and to-day the city of Peterboro is enjoying the fruits of their wise building.

Sewage Disposal Plant

A visit was also made to the new $250,000 sewage disposal plant which is being built by the city.

This is an extensive undertaking and Engineer Parsons gave our committee much valuable information.

The committee had a very interesting and happy day of it and each feels the better qualified to deal with the civic problems of this community. This is but the first of a series of visits that will no doubt be made to other important centres. The committee is not in search of new avenues for the expenditure of public money but for information that will help in obtaining more and better service for what expenditures are necessary and compulsory.

It will not be long before this city will be face to face with an improved fire protection service, and enlarged and better sewage disposal plant and other problems incident to our continued rapid growth and progress.

By seeing and learning at first hand how other communities are meeting and solving their problems we shall be the better equipped to solve our own."

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT.

Peterboro Exhibition Will be the Best Ever—Read What They Say.

All those in charge of preparations for the Exhibition are simply radiating optimism. Roland Denne predicts that this year's show will be the biggest and best in history of the town. Other members of the committees and directorate are equally sanguine. Jack Gillespie is confident that everything will be spick and span for the opening on Tuesday.

All the buildings have been repainted, the boundary fences whitewashed and the grass has been cut until the grounds resemble the lawn of a bowling club.

In the Manufacturers Building, all the spaces have been portioned off for occupancy by exhibits from local firms and stalls are being rapidly erected. No space has been allowed to go begging and the display of manufactures will be the largest ever brought together on the Exhibition grounds.

Some of the exhibits will be placed in the stalls on Saturday. The remainder will arrive on Monday. Everything will be so arranged that Tuesday will find the Exhibition ready to be set agoing full blast.

Men working yesterday and today, erected a large tent in which will be held the dog show. It is hoped that this year's effort will be a three point show and owners who have not yet entered their pets are urged to do so at once.

The musical attractions will be away ahead of those in other years; the horticultural exhibits will be finer; the entries in the poultry and live stock competitions are the largest on record; the decorations will be even better than last year; crowds, it is hoped, will be larger; the entire show, in fact, will be more ambitious in every way and the farmers are all praying fervently for good weather.

GAS IN THE STOMACH IS DANGEROUS

Recommends Daily Use of Magnesia to Overcome Trouble, Caused by Fermenting Food and Acid Indigestion.

Gas and wind in the stomach accompanied by that full, bloated feeling after eating are almost certain evidence of the presence of excessive hydrochloric acid in the stomach, creating so-called "acid" indigestion.

Acid stomachs are dangerous because too much acid irritates the delicate lining of the stomach, often leading to gastritis, accompanied by serious stomach ulcers. Food ferments and sours, creating the distressing gas which distends the stomach and hampers the normal functions of the vital organs, often affecting the heart.

It is the worst of folly to neglect such a serious condition or to treat with ordinary digestive aids which have no neutralizing effect on the stomach acids. Instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This will drive the gas, wind and bloat right out of the body, sweeten the stomach, neutralize the excess acid and prevent its formation and there is no sourness or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and the best form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

FIRST DAY POINTS SUCCESS OF LOAN

New Dominion Floatation Meets Big Demand From Public.

TORONTO, Sept. 10.—(Special to The Examiner).—The first day of public offering of the new Dominion loan points to another immediate success. Offerings of the bonds commenced at nine o'clock on Wednesday, and before noon it was stated by members of the syndicate that the demand by those offices approaches was even stronger than in the case of last year's refunding loan. Banks, institutions and others had apparently been awaiting an official announcement that the Government's financial programme would result in a Canadian loan and were prompt to place orders.

Members of the syndicate believe that the loan is being just as eagerly sought as those of previous years. Not only was the institutional demand strong but the private investor demand has been commented upon. Reports gathered in Toronto and from outside points indicate that all classes of investors have been quick to respond to the initial announcement. From all sources, it is stated that the interest of investors has been fully awakened and that as a popular issue, the new loan will rank with victories and refunding loan bonds.

It is understood that those in close touch with the issue that notwithstanding the strong early demand, efforts will be exerted to make bonds available to private investors in distant points whose orders cannot be placed as promptly as is possible in the cases of those residing more centrally. A nation-wide plan of distribution has been quickly organized and bonds are now being offered by practically every bond dealer, stock exchange broker and chartered bank in Canada.

ALDERMAN CROWE REPORTS ON NEW TRAFFIC SIGNAL SYSTEM

Observed Working of Arrangement in Toronto and Hamilton Recently.

UNDER CONSIDERATION

Pedestrians Not Observing Rules Are Cautioned By Police.

At Tuesday night's meeting of the City Council, Alderman Joseph Crowe presented his report on observation of traffic signal systems in Toronto and Hamilton. The report was sent to the Police Commission for consideration.

Alderman Crowe's report was:

In compliance with the resolution passed by this Council at its last regular meeting for me to procure information and investigate appliances that are in use in some places.

With instructions from His Worship the Mayor I went to Toronto and Hamilton, where a signal system is being tried out for some time.

In Toronto, at the corner of Bloor and Yonge Streets, the Crouse & Hinds Company has placed the bracket-type of traffic signals. There are four at this corner attached to poles belonging to the city. The signal extends out from a pole at a right angle to the pole and horizontal or parallel with the ground. They had to be placed about 16 feet above the street level so as to comply with the city bylaws. A cast-iron box is placed beside one of the poles on the ground which contains the automatic mechanism which operates the signals. This is a very congested corner and there were two policemen on duty who did not stand on the roadway but walked along the sidewalk, and those who did not observe the signals were reprimanded. Chief Dickson had the company place a large gong on one of the poles which rang at intervals. This gong has since been removed as not necessary. The wires were in conduits overhead to do the operating. I noticed several who did not stop and were at once called to one side to be cautioned. The policeman told me that they were all practically strangers or tourists. The general impression of all that I came in contact with was that it went a long way toward making it safe for traffic, also assised in relieving congested traffic by conducting it quickly at a very nominal cost, those four signals costing about $3.00 per month for power to operate and light. There was one objection by those in closed cars, that the signals were rather high, making it necessary for the driver to bend his head down to see when to start his car. Sometimes a street car was held up by not being ready to proceed when the signal was given to go. Th police were very favorable to its adoption.

Toronto has many streets where cars have to stop at street intersections before proceeding, but have a traffic officer there, also some streets only one way direction for cars, with no left turns.

Next day I proceeded to Hamilton who have two signals suspended on wire in the centre of streets about as high as the trolley line. I found no traffic officer whatever in attendance and watched how the people observed the signals. All that I spoke to were delighted with the improvement and considered it very necessary, and hoped that the winter months would not handicap its use. The city authorities have ordered six more.

I had the assistant city clerk write eight cities of Ontario for information re traffic laws, etc., and all replied. Five have cars stop at intersections of some streets. Two are arranging to have it adopted and one has no method as yet.

I have gone over the ground carefully and I am convinced that some method is necessary to protect the pedestrian as well as the vehicle traffic in our city at the most dangerous crossings.

This system seems to me to fill the requirements without the expense of a traffic officer, and should be adopted by this council, and have one or two signals placed on trial to meet with your approval before purchase.

DRIVE ON RUNNERS CUTS LIQUOR TRADE

Exports From British Isles Have Dropped Since January.

LONDON, Sept. 10.—(Canadian Press).—The offensive of the United States prohibition forces against rum row and liquor smugglers is having a marked effect on the export liquor traffic of the British Isles. This traffic is now going through such a lean period that no money is available any more to finance rum-running expeditions, and exports of liquor destined for the arid United States have dropped almost fifty per cent. since January.

CONFIDENT OF VICTORY.

J. F. Strickland Says Conservatives Will Carry the Country.

"I am confident that a new government under the leadership of Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, will be in charge of the affairs of the country after the election is over," J. F. Strickland, secretary of the Liberal-Conservative Association, told The Examiner this morning. "I am equally confident that the Conservative candidate in this riding will represent West Peterborough. Despite Mr. Gordon's personal popularity he will be held accountable as supporter of the government, for the sins of omission and commission of the King administration. Since Saturday last I have had increasing evidence of the fact that a change has come over the political sentiment of the riding.

"Many former Liberals have resolved to give the other party a chance to put the country on its feet. All the Conservative party asks is to be given a trial. If it fails it will be held equally accountable by the electors."

THE ADVENTURE

By Eleanor Hope

When you're at the seashore on your vacation, every time you venture into the foamy surf—it's an adventure! Who knows what may happen then? Perhaps you'll get a wee bit beyond your depth, and get scared and call for help and the One for whom you have been searching all your life will come to your rescue. Won't that be wonderful and isn't that what you'd call a thrilling adventure? And you can just bet that Dan Cupid has had something to do with it. He loves to be sensational sometimes, in order to bring together two whom he has chosen for each other. So be on the watch, for such an adventure may mean Love!

A FASHION MODEL'S DIARY

By Grace Thorncliffe

SHE CHATS ABOUT A SATIN AFTERNOON FROCK

"There are just two kinds of frocks abroad," a chic little client who has just returned from the other side assured me today.

"And what may they be?" I asked, all interest immediately.

"Frocks with flared backs, or those that are absolutely straight at the back, devoid of a vestige of trimming," she informed me.

"Then Madame's things are just about right for Fall," I returned.

"Madame's things are always just about right," the client said with a smile. Then she added:

"I've just returned from abroad, as you know, and the things I didn't have time to look for in Paris, I decided I'd leave to Madame to design for me, so you see how I trust her taste."

"I think your confidence is well placed," I assured her.

About this time Madame appeared on the scene, and the young girl began to explain to her what she wanted in the way of a frock. She said:

"I need something smart to wear in the afternoons, not a formal afternoon gown by any menas, but just some simple little thing I can don at a moment's notice."

Madame took in the trim figure of the client and said:

"I have a new frock on the line I think you will like immensely. I'll have one of the girls show it for you."

A message was sent to Pam to model a certain frock, and I waited outside to see how Pammie would look in it' as I had only seen it on the hanger and one gets a much better idea by seeing the dress on a real person.

Presently Pam strolled out on to the tiny manikin's stage, and I knew immediately the dress would make a hit.

It was a smooth black satin model, trimmed with narrow bands of blue silk braid, a sort of royal blue that is very stunning with black.

The braid ran in slim lines between the applied pleats at the front of the dress.

"Do turn so I can get the back view again," the client asked Pam.

Pam faced slowly about, and the client said in pleased tones:

"The identical straight back line I saw so much in Paris."

"And don't you like the long tight sleeves?" Madame asked her.

There was a little more conversation on the subject of sleeves and necklines, and the client placed an order for the frock. Then she went to the millinery salon to look at hats.

Let's Talk It Over

WASTING SUNSHINE AND BREAKING INTO PRINT

Is there a way of telling if a man really loves you, and are all men alike? I am 21 and he is 42. I don't care about the differences in our ages as I care about him very much. He takes me on week nights anywhere I want to go but when it comes to Sunday, he always has an excuse about having to go to the country. He has been keeping this up for six months already, and I tell him that Sunday is the day for a fellow to take his girl out. Isn't it?

When he takes me to dances he takes me there alone, but when it is time to go home he always has three girls in the machine, and says they live out his way. He takes me home first! other girls last. Do you think that is right?

Shall, I tell him not to call for me any more? What shall I really do?

BROKEN HEARTED.

Now, listen a minute, Pal. No one is breaking your heart—hearts aren't broken that way. You're breaking your own heart by tying it on one man's favor. You're making it sick by giving it too much of the same diet.

That one man isn't big enough to fill your heart—get interested in someone else.—or something else. Take up tennis or swimming, or French—get a new interest—make new friends—keep busy. If you fed your tummy on nothing but French pastry you'd soon have a pain in it, wouldn't you? If you feed your heart on nothing but romantic yearning it's going to get sick, too.

Snap out of it. Let him take his three girls home after the dance, and get yourself three new beaux and a couple of good books and a tennis racquet.

Every mail brings me some request about short story writing, or a request to criticise or edit a story. Now I'm not an authority on short story or any other kind of writing, and it is absolutely impossible for me to read or criticise manuscripts. But I can agree with an experts' statement that the short story is the "most difficult of all forms of tale telling, and the one that most inevitably attracts the unskilled."

The first thing to learn and the last thing to forget in any kind of writing is that It Is a Regular Job And Must Be Treated As Such If You Wish To Achieve Success. You'll have to dig at it endlessly just as you would dig at mathematics or housekeeping or plumbing or chemistry. The Best Writers Are Great Riveters. No, that is not a joke. This idea that writing is done "under inspiration" or whenever the mood cackles is The Bunk. Perspiration, not inspiration is the secret of sound literature.

After all, whether you're destined to become a great writer or a collector of rejection slips, whether you plan to make writing a life work, or only a diversion, Writing Pays. It's the best sort of daily dozen for the woman whose house and children keep her within four walls most of the time. It opens the world of romance and adventure to her, and takes her out of her own little sphere of dishwashing and cooking, marketing and making over. If you want to write—go to it—it's worth while.

Even if the others don't think so, the revenue you get will be worth more to you than a fixed income!

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of twenty-eight and have been going out with a man seven years younger than I. He is very fond of me, in fact too fond as he is very jealous of me. I am engaged to this young man, and I feel sometimes as though I would would give back this ring and call it quits. I am very fond of him myself, his only fault is jealousy. Can you give me any advice as to how I should make him overcome this fault as he has no reasons to be jealous.

CURLY

CURLY: It is almost impossible to cure a man of jealousy, Curly. They are all jealous to a certain extent, as indeed most women are, but evidently your fiance has developed the trait over much. By some it is considered a sign of extreme affection, but it may also spring from a suspicious mind. If I were you, I would try and discover the reason for this jealousy on the part of your admirer. If the fault lies with you, if you are flirting a little and worrying the poor fellow then you had better change your ways, that is, if you care for him because you are probably giving him some unhappy hours. If you think it is only because he is so fond of you that he resents any little variation of your attention from him, and you are not at fault in any way, you will have to humor him and put up with it. However if his jealousy springs from an unclean and suspicious mind, and he is the type who regards every woman as fickle and morally weak, give him back his ring and thank your stars you didn't have t olive with him until you die.

St. Charles is pure, country milk just as it comes from inspected cows in choice dairy districts. Nothing is added. Nothing is taken away except half of the natural water content which is "evaporated" that this pure milk may be put up in convenient form. If you desire a milk of creamy richness for your recipe use St. Charles just as it comes from the can—or, you can make it go twice as far by bringing it to the consistency of ordinary milk—on adding an equal quantity of water. ATHLETICS PROLONG DECISION BY DEFEATING SENATORS AGAIN

Break Even on Series and Cut Margin to Seven Games.

CHANCE IS SLIM

PHILADELPHIA, September 9. —Canadian Press. — The tide of fortune which turned yesterday in favor of the Mackmen after 12 straight defeats, rolled them on to victory again to-day in the final games of the series with Washington.

By taking the measure of the Senators 9 to 7 in a tumultuous, free-hitting battle, the Athletics earned an even break on the series of four games and cut the margin of the league leading champions to seven games.

This come back of the Athletics bids fair to prolong the American League pennant issue, but with only about a score of games remaining on each club's schedule it is still a forlorn and virtually hopeless task for the Mackmen to overcome their rivals.

Al Simons, slugging centrefielder, Lefty Beumgartner and Eddie Rommel, veteran knuckle ball twirler, were the heroes of the Athletics' victory, but the mighty bat of Roger Peckinpaugh, the "old warhorse" of the Washington clan, almost downed Mack's men singlehanded. Score:

PITTSBURGH, September 9. — Canadian Press. — Chicago won the final game of the series from the Pirates to-day 9 to 7, in 11 innings, making the count three out of four from the league leaders. The Cubs broke thriugh the tie in the 11th innings, when hits and errors resulted in three tallies. In the local half Cuyler tripled and Traynor singled, but Kauffman tightened up and ended a budding rally. The score:

NEW SWIMMING RECORD

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 10.—(Canadian Press).—Arne Borg, Swedish swimming champion, yesterday bettered two world's records when he swam 500 yards in 5 minutes 38.1 seconds, and 500 metres in 6 minutes 8.4 seconds.

Records last accepted for these distances by the International Amateur Swimming Federation are those of Johnny Weismueller, of the United States, whose mark for the 500 yards, free style, was 5 minutes 50.4 seconds, and for the 500 metres, 6 minutes 24.2 seconds. On July 28, at Gothenburg, Sweden, Borg swam 500 metres in 6 minutes 19.6 seconds, which he claimed as a world's record.

'MANNA' FAILED QUESTING FAME

Beaten By "Solario" on St. Leger Course — Sought "Triple Crown" Fame.

DONCASTER, Eng., Sept. 9 (Canadian Press) — A thoroughbred's bid for lasting fame failed before a multitude of racing enthusiasts and thousands of Yorkshire people at the Town Moor course here yesterday afternoon, when Solario, at seven to two against, won the St. Leger, and Manna was an "also ran." Solario had gradually risen in favor before the start, but Manna's performance was not as good as had been looked for by the public.

After winning the Derby and the Two Thousand Guineas with H. E. Morriss' colt, the Beckhampton establishment concentrated on the task of putting Manna in the ranks of the "triple Crown" winners by capturing the final of the season's three-year-old classics yesterday. The distance was too much for the colt, however, and Solario beat Manna as he did at Ascot in June, and at Newmarket last October.

Solario is a son of Gainsborough, who won the three races run as substitutes for the major classics during the war years, and is owned by Sir John Rutherford. In the Middle Park Stakes last fall Solario was beaten only by Picaroon, the champion colt, and in turn headed Manna, and when he ran third, Picaroon winning, in the Craven Stakes at Newmarket in the spring he seemed to have maintained his form. Solario, however, finished fourth in the Two Thousand Guineas and fifth in the Derby.

Then at Ascot, in the Ascot Derby, Solario won, defeating Manna, who, however, carried 10 lbs. more. As a consequence Solario was second favorite for the race today, Manna being the public choice.

Zambo's Record

H. H. Aga Khan won second place in the St. Leger with Zambo, who was backed at 6 to 1 against. His Salmon Trout was the winner last year. Zambo has a remarkable record, to which attention is called by his coming within three lengths of winning the Turf's senior classic. In his four starts he won three and was short a neck to win the Eclipse Stakes, from the crack four-year-old Polyhontes. Zambo has been kept out of the more prominent fields this season, and did not start in either of the previous classies. Zambo is by Sunstar out of Airashil.

Warden of the Marches who finished third today has appeared only once or twice this season, winning Lonsdale, and is a son of Phalaria, a minor race. He is owned by Lord who is also sire of Manna. Warden had the fine record of being placed in three of his starts as a two-year? old, and winning his only other race, but has been almost lost sight of this season, as was evidenced by the betting odds of eighteen to one against placed on him for the St. Leger.

The St. Leger is four years older than the Derby, having been run sinc 1776. The series is broken only by the substitute races run during the war. Besides being the senior, it is the longest of the five classics, one mile and six furlongs, 132 yards. Perhaps the only reason the Derby is more popular than yesterday's race is that Doncaster is up in the north country, and not close to London. The St. Leger, however, has a value to the winner of very close on $50,000.

ROTARY LADS GO DOWN TO DEFEAT

Peterboro Boys Were Unable to Hit Miller to Any Effect.

SCORE WAS 8-2.

OSHAWA, Sept. 10 (Special)—Bob Abate's Eliazbeths, champions of the Toronto Bantam series, won the right to go into the Ontario Baseball Amateur Association finals with Guelph Bantams by defeating Sergeant Deannard's Rotary team of Peterboro here this afternoon by a score of 8 to 2. Inability to hit Miller with any effect was the downfall of the Petes, while the Toronto crew touched Crary and Moffatt for ten safe clours included in which was a circuit drive by Gibble. Miller also made fifteen of the Peterboro kids go out by the strike out route and figured in the run getting of his team by crossing the plate twice, the first after he was given a walk and the second when he poled out a three bagger. Peterboro, who looked like sure contenders from the east in the Ontario finals for the Carls Rite and Walker House frophy by their two former performances against the Toronto playground champions, were made look like also rans today and the Miner trophy looks like to stay in the Queen City for another year. C.G.E. LADIES HAD OFF DAY, LOSING TO HOPE LADIES

Babe Vincent, Pitching Third Game in Five Days, Was Hit Hard.

NO SUPPORT

Eighteen Errors Aided Winners in Piling Up Total of 36 Runs.

C.G.E. Ladies blew completely in the semi-final round of the C.N.E. Tourney and lost to Hope ladies 36-8. The winners will meet Danforth Ladies on Friday in the final.

Babe Vincent, pitching her third game in five days, showed the effect of the grind and was touched for 28 hits. Her teammates helped the Hope cause along with 18 errors, and did very little to balance the flock of runs, collecting only 9 hits.

Dot Price, on the rubber for Hope, had the situation entirely in hand at all times. She was a little wild and got in a hole several times, 8 errors helping, but at critical moments she was given wonderful support.

There were no stars on the winning team. Every player made at least two hits while the cleanup hitters, Misses Todd and Smith, had 6 and 5 respectively. Miss Walton made 4 hits and Miss McArthur had 3.

The long distance hits were home runs by Misses Smith and Price, a triple by Miss Evans, and doubles too numerous to mention.

On the C.G.E. team, Misses Forsythe, Greer and Vincent went errorless. Miss Evans, Miss Greenhalgh and Miss Vincent had two hits each, and Miss Greer had one in one time at bat. Miss Taylor and Miss Forsythe were responsible for the other two.

Manager Pilling made several changes in his line-up during the game. Miss Taylor started at first but her ankle bothered her and she moved out to left. When Miss Greenhalgh failed at shortstop Miss Taylor moved in to that position, Miss Greenhalgh going to the field. The bunting game of the Toronto team made Manager Pilling bring in Miss Forsythe and play two shortstops and two outfielders. Miss Greer replaced Miss Connors in the field and in the eighth changed places with Miss Vincent. That the change could have been made earlier to advantage was shown by the fact that only one hit was made off Miss Greer's offerings.

The game looked good until the fourth. Three errors and nine hits, mostly bunts were good for seven Hope runs in the first 3 innings. One run in the third raised the spirits of the C.G.E. supporters who included a large contingent of Danforth boys.

The fourth decided the result. The fifth Hope run of the inning was scored on a sacrifice fly which was the first out, and thirteen counters had been tallied before the last ou was registered. Eight hits, a sacrifice and nine errors were contributing factors to this result.

After that the game was never in doubt. No inning passed without one or more Hope tallies, while the third, with one, the fifth and ninth, with two each, and the sixth with three runs, were the only times the Peterborough girls counted in the game.

RAYBESTOS TAKE THE COUNT FROM DELORO SMELTER

Exciting Contest Writes "Finis" to Brakemaker Efforts.

SCORE 5 TO 3.

Ada Was Big Figure in the Scoring Column With Three Hits.

Not until the final put-out was made in their half of the ninth did the Raybestos players give up hope of hammering out a victory. It was denied them, however, and Deloro were conceded the win by a score of 5 to 3.

Lack of punch lost the game. Many times the bags were loaded with men, but the hitters failed to deliver the necessary safe wallops. While the Smelters netted three when Ada's screaming line drive grounded past Duggan and they got their other two in the fifth, following a combination of Brown's single, Ada's double. Schultz coming through afterward with a safe bunt.

The infield of each team turned in great cards, not a single error being registered by either team. The outfields, possibly due to the swampy nature of the ground were more ragged, Raybestos being allotted four and Deloro gardeners half that figure.

Batten and Rogers were the leading haymakers for the Raybestos. Rogers rapped out two long doubles in four starts, which on a hard diamond might have gone for circuit clouts. Batten had two singles in four attempts. Duggan, Ranger, O. Nicholls, Moore and Coursey poked out base blows, Ranger stretching his drive to two cushions.

Moore, who was given the heaving assignment for the Rays, turned in a splendid game. It was his second in four days, and both meetings were staged on muddy diamonds, where the conditions for pitching were not very desirable.

Shea, for Deloro, pitched a steady game, striking out seven and getting assistance when it was needed.

Deloro's leading slugger was the sometime heaver, Ada, who cavorted around the mid-section of the outer works. In four trips to the plate he tallied two doubles and a single, driving home four Smelter runs. Brown and Hughes captured two safe ones, Brown 2 in four tries and Hughes two out of three.

All counts were scored in the fifth, sixth and seventh frames, each team drawing blanks in the other sections. The line-up:

TENNIS FINALS FOR DAVIS CUP

Tilden and Johnston Facing French Pair in the Singles.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 10 (Canadian Press)—William T. Tilden and William M. Johnston, who brought the Davis Cup back to the United States in 1920 and have dominated its successful defence since then, will enter the challenge round fray today against France, a new contender for the international tennis trophy.

Unless the forecast of rain comes true and holds up the program, "Big Bill" Tilden will begin the defense of the famous cup against Jean Borotra, spectacular French star, whose astonishing performances were chiefly responsible for his country's victory over Australia in the inter-zone finals. This match will be followed by the remaining singles encounter of the day between "Little Bill" Johnston and Rene Lacoste, 20 year old champion of Wimbledon.

The rest of the challenge round series is made up of the doubles, on Friday, when R. Norris Williams, United States captain, and Vincent Richards are expected to be named to face Borotra and Lacoste, while in the two concluding singles contests, slated for Saturday, Tilden will meet Lacoste and Johnston will face Borotra.

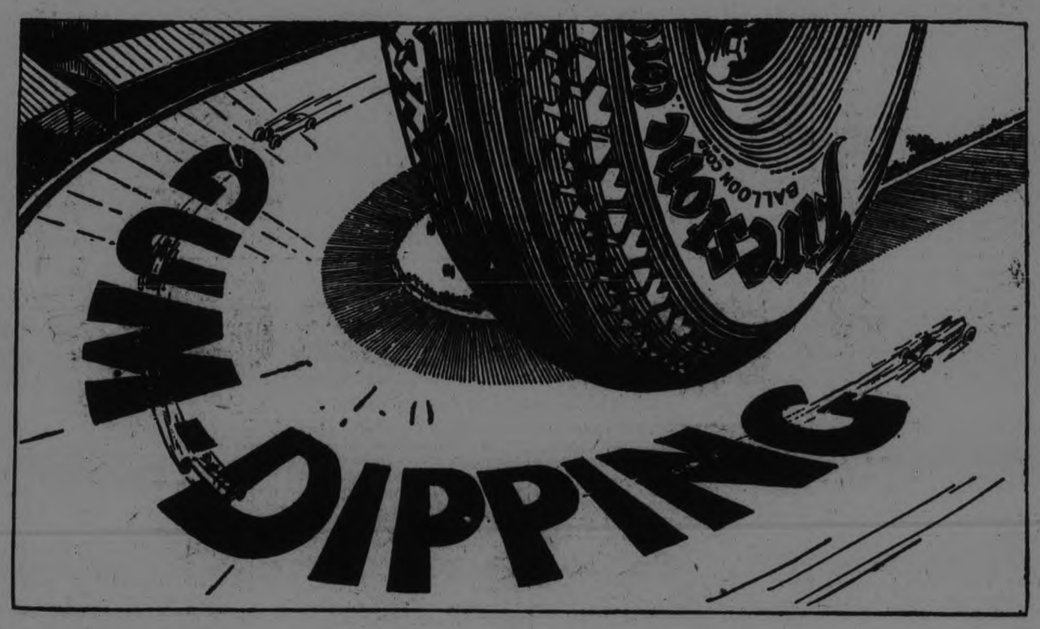
Toronto's most consistent feminine baseball fans are shown above. They are Helen Thomas and her two-year -old daughter, Hyrtice Ann. Mrs. Thomas is the wife of Myles Louis Thomas, star pitcher of the Maple Leafs, and leading twirler of the International League. She and Myrtice have seen practically all of the 25 games won by her husband this season, besides scores in which he did not take part. The marriage was the outcome of a baseball romance in Hartford, Connecticut, where Thomas pitched a no-hit game. After the ceremony Myles admits that he forthwith began to play better baseball.



The Extra Process that Safeguards the Men Who Break Records

The greatest racing honors ever won in tire history have come to Firestone through Gum-Dipping.

At the Canadian National Exhibition, Firestone Balloon Gum-Dipped Cords demonstrated their extra strength and safety by winning the most important race of the meet. At Brandon, Calgary and other western tracks, this summer, new records were set on Firestones.

In the International Sweepstakes at Indianapolis, May 30th, a new world record was set on Firestones—101.13 miles per hour, for 500 miles—without tire trouble.

It was Gum-Dipping that made these speed kings confident on the treacherous turns, and carried them through the ordeal with far less than usual fatigue.

It accounts for the outstanding success of Firestone Full-Size Balloons—giving the flexible walls the extra strength to withstand the extra flexing strain.

Drive with perfect confidence in your tires. Enjoy new steering and braking control, and the easy riding that saves you and your car from shocks and vibration. Have the nearest Firestone Dealer apply a set of real Balloon Tires—Full Size! Gum-Dipped! Built only by Firestone!

LOCAL CRICKET CLUB WON ONE WEEK-END GAME

Defeated C.G.E. Davenport Works Easily in Toronto on Saturday.

LOST ON HOLIDAY

Birchcliffe C. C. Won Out in Labor Day Match in Queen City.

The Peterboro Cricket Club wound up their season's match schedule this last week-end with two games in Toronto, on Saturday, against the Canadian General Electric Co.'s Davenport works team and on Monday against the Birchcliffe Club. The first game resulted in a great win and the second one was lost. The total results of the team's games in Toronto are two wins and one loss, which reflects great credit on the team's capabilities when it is understood that these teams are not in any way to be despised. The biggest win in Toronto was that against Rosedale, which club finished near the top of division A, and Birchcliffe are champions of division B, having lost only one match this season.

The game with the Canadian General Electric Co.'s Davenport Works Cricket Club was played on Trinity College grounds. The C.G.E. team won the toss and elected to send Peterboro in to bat first, opening up with Stuart and O'Connor-Fenton against the bowling of Adams and Stock.

As usual for Peterboro, it opened up disastrously, for with only one run scored Fenton was caught by a nice high one-handed catch at point. Three more wickets fell, making a score of fifteen for four. At this point prospects brightened for a valuable partnership set in between Coutts and Thorpe, who carried the score to seventy-six for five when Thorpe was bowled. This partnership contributed sixty-one runs and is the best one made by the Peterboro Club this season. Coutts seemingly felt the loss of his partner and was caught and bowled after the addition of another run. The score rose to 87 for 9 when a very snappy last wicket partnership by Ryland and Levens, who had kindly consented to substitute for the Peterboro Club, of twenty-eight runs was made, carrying the score to 115.

Early in the Peterboro innings it started to rain and continued gently throughout the rest of the game, making the ball very difficult to control.

The Davenport works opened their batting by Ashley and Stock against Dyer and Thorpe. The two batsmen played steadily, but did not make any headway, for the first wicket fell with only three runs scored, the second falling at the same total. A very valuable ten was contributed by Warren, the fourth and fifth wickets falling at seventeen. From this point the very little agression was made against the Peterboro bowling and fielding, the innings closing at 39, thanks to a most valuable innings of seventeen by G. R. Hall, who with Warren were the only C.G.E. batsmen to make any headway.

For the home team Stock took four wickets, with Adams and Lowe three each, while for the visitors Dyer took seven for nine runs and Thorpe 3.

The game over, the visitors were entertained to tea in the Davenport works dining-room, which was heartily partaken of by all. G. R. Langley, President of the Peterboro Club, proposed a vote of thanks to the home club for the refreshments and game, which was responded to by Captain Adams.

The Holiday Game.

The game on Monday, Labor Day, against Birchcliffe, started in dull, grey weather after a twenty-four hours' steady rain. Both teams played and batted twelve men. Captain Thorpe won the toss and elected to bat first, sending in Coutts and Stuart against the bowling of Hollowell and Robertson. Both players played very cautiously, the matting being sodden making the balls very difficult to play. The visitors, being unaccustomed to a very slow bowler, were in difficulties at the outset with Robertson's deliveries.

Runs came slowly and steadily until the innings losed for a total of 114, thanks to two good innings of 28 and 20 by Walmingham (loaned by the home team) and Stan. Thorpe.

Birchcliffe sent in Stevenson and Leeming against the bowling of Dyer and C. Thorpe. It opened disastrously, for they lost their four batsmen for as many runs.

Lunch was taken at this stage, and on resumption of play a most timely stand was made by Robertson and Field, the latter being bowled at the total of 54 for a total of 22. The home team continued to play steadily and took no chances, and passed the visitors' total with nine wickets down and ran up a total score of 152. Robertson contributed the highest innings of 41 for the home team, batting throughout with caution and confidence. He gave a chance behind the wicket before he had reached double figures; otherwise it was faultless. Another valuable innings was 25 by Hollowell. The smart wicket-keeping of Emms for the home team resulted in the downfall of two of the visitors. The Peterboro team shared particularly in the field, frequently drawing applause for their smartness, the veteran Stuart again distinguishing himself by turning in a "byeless" card.

For the home team Robertson and Hollowell were the most successful bowlers, each taking three wickets, and for the visitors Dyer was the most successful with 7 wickets for 40 runs, Thorpe taking 3 wickets for 68.

At the conclusion of the game tea was served on the grounds. Both this event and the lunch were served in a marquee specially erected for the occasion, the Birchcliffe ladies scoring in this as their "better-halves" had in the field. A vote of thanks to the home team and ladies for the splendid refreshments was very happily proposed by Mr. Stuart, Vice-President of the Peterboro Club, and responded to by Mr. Perkins, Vice-President of the Birchcliffe Club. At this stage the latter called on the late President of the club, Mr. Webster, for a few remarks. These consisted of a description of the progress of the game in the Border Cities, where the speaker is now located. He said that the game has a big following there, and that the Windsor club was encouraged by the City Council, the Mayor contributing a sum of five hundred dollars, with a promise of more if needed, to the expenses of the tour of that club round a number of Ontario towns. (Local Council, please note). Musical honors were accorded the Birchcliffe ladies and cheers for the respective teams concluded a most enjoyable day.

AT THE GRAND

"A LITTLE BIT OF FLUFF."

After a very successful continental tour and already playing to capacity houses in Western Ontario, one of the most laughable farce comedies ever produced will be presented at the Grand Theatre on Saturday, Sept. 12, when Mr. Francis Compton will give the initial showing of "A Little Bit of Fluff."

This noted English comedian is supported by a very excellent cast of artists and the show itself is one riot of continuous laughter from start to finish. Popular prices will prevail and seats will be on sale at the Opera House on Thursday, Sept. 10.

"WHITE CARGO."

The London Free Press says of "White Cargo," which comes to the Grand to-morrow night:

"White Cargo," Leon Gordon's play, made out of Ida Vera Simonton's book, "Hell's Playground," returned to London and to the Grand. There it was played in the afternoon and evening before two immense holiday audiences, which, by their appreciation of the piece, gave substantial reason as to just why it has held the boards in New York for a matter of two years.

On the West Coast of Africa, doing their contracted-for stretches on the rubber plantations, are certain young Englishmen trying to escape the attacks of "dry rot" that eats into men's souls as well as their vitals in that lonesome and loathsome country. Among them is Longford, newly arrived and defiant as the newly arrived always are, swearing that he will not succumb as the others have to whisky or native women. For a year he sticks it out, but finally, broken down by home sickness, insomnia and sex hunger, Tondeleyo, a half-caste native girl, with a beautiful body, but a shallow soul, undermines his resistance. All the defiance that remains in Longford is his determination not to fully fulfil the cynical prophesies of the seven-year-old Witzel that he will one day knock under along with the rest. With a last stand for respectability he marries the girl. She tires of him as quickly as he tires of her. She thereupon determines to rescue herself from the white man's marriage law by poison, secretly administered to her fever-stricken husband in the guise of medicine. Witzel discovers Tondeleyo's purposed plan and in a highly sensational scene makes her drink the poison she has prepared for Longford. As for Longford he is shipped home. So much "White Cargo" for the river boats. One of the human wrecks out of whose suffering the world squeezes its rubber.

Marshall Vincent, who plays the Doctor this year, is an actor with an undoubted ability to create sympathy in the minds of his audience for a misfortuned character. A fine, upstanding man of gentlemanly instincts and social culture, he gives us the picture of a man of scientific and scholarly attainments degenerated into what on the West Coast is called a "spotter," yet who for all his hard life and his whisky soaking never degenerating into the creature he might so easily have become. The Doctor's drinking bouts, though they make the unskillful in the audience laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. A strange thing this laughter at drunkenness in a prohibition country. What is the psychology back of the titter? One wonders.

The Tondeleyo of Isabelle Herbert, though perhaps not so brilliantly beautiful as that of her predecessor, is equally seductive; with a horror as of things primitive and proscribed running through it. One receives the simple unconscious indecency of Tondeleyo as though it were a blow. That anything so animal and yet so incorrigible should at the same time be human!

Milton Boyle as Roberts, the missionary, gives the same excellent visualization, and characterization of the role as he brought to us last season, better and more fluid if anything.

Franklin George repeated his fine portrayal of the character of Longford, full of life and hope and high ideals at the beginning of the play. But beaten down at the end, as so many other young Britons have been before him, by the untoward conditions of the outports of empire.

To Earl D. Dwire, this year as last, go special honors for his interpretation of the very difficult and exacting role of Witzel, manager of the rubber station—out on the West Coast seven years and eaten through and through with the dry rot of fever, inertia and cynicism, which sooner or later attacks the bodies, the minds and the hearts of the white men who seek to conquer it. Witzel seems almost irredeemable. Yet something of decency is hidden always beneath his sun-baked shrunken, scurrilous exterior. That something rises, finally, at the call of the blood of the race that is in him. Mr. Dwire's work held the audience spell bound.

AT THE CAPITOL

"THE TEN COMMANDMENTS" COVERS TIME AND TERRITORY

The Red Sea and San Francisco are about five thousand miles apart. The Israelites led by Moses on their exodus from Egypt are separated by about forty centuries from Sunday afternoon jazz dancing to-day. Yet, Cecil B. DeMille has managed to put them together convincingly in his picturization of "The Ten Commandments." This great Paramount picture comes to the Capitol Theatre to-day, where it will be shown for the first time at popular prices.

The modern story opens on a devout mother driving one of her two sons from home because he will not "apologize to God," for what she believes sacrilege. The son goes out into the world, not bitterly, but boyishly exultant, to smash every commandment. Then DeMille develops his theme that "if you try to break the Ten Commandments they'll break you."

A gorgeous Biblical episode, done in natural colors, is enacted by such popular players as Estelle Taylor, Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Charles de Roche, and Lawson Butt. The two million persons who have paid from one to two dollars to see this greatest of Paramount Pictures testify that the highest point the cinema art has yet reached, has been achieved in this most ambitious directorial effort of Cecil B. DeMille.

AT THE ROYAL.

Community singing and local amateurs will be added to the programme at the Royal to-night.

Special slides have been made of many of the old favorite songs, and the audience is invited to sing them.

"Oh Doctor," with Reginald Denny, is the guaranteed feature attraction. Every New York paper says it is one of the best farce comedies ever made. We'll see to-night!

DENNY IS HERE!

"Oh, Doctor!" Universal-Jewel with Reginald Denny as star is coming to the Royal Theatre to-day. Most persons remember with pleasure the serial of the same name by Harry Leon Wilson, published in The Saturday Evening Post, and in consequence are looking forward to seeing the screen version of what has been called one of the most delightful, whimsical stories published in recent years.

Denny has made for himself a wide fame as an exponent of the more subtle kind of humor, as well as for his daring in thrilling scenes, and in the latter part of "Oh, Doctor!" he is given ample opportunity to display his ability in the latter, while the entire story affords opportunity for humorous characterization.

The original story was acclaimed; not alone for its delightful humor of conception, but for its satirical "kidding" of a quite prevalent mental quirk, known as hypochondria. It is as a hypochondriac that Denny is first introduced. An incubator baby, he grew to manhood almost literally wrapped in cotton batting.

Circumstances make him the guest of an aunt who has no patience with his various fears, and she attempts to bring him out of his hallucination by vigorous methods, but without avail. Needing money he borrows on the inheritance he will come into if he lives three years, the Shylocks who make the loan insisting that they shall receive the entire fortune as payment.

Nurse As Incentive.

However, their frequent visits alarm them and they decide that he must have a new interest in life. To that effect they employ a beautiful nurse and ere long the "sick" man is in love and determined to convince her that he has it in him to become one of the daredevils who people the brand of fiction she reads. Then ensues a series of thrilling, hazardous adventures that nearly drive crazy all those who are interested in him.

AT THE REGENT

"CHARLEY'S AUNT" UNIVERSAL FARCE

Screen Version of Riotous Hit Has Syd Chaplin in Title Role.

The screen version of the internationally famous farce "Charley's Aunt," by Brandon Thomas will be the feature attraction at the Regent Theatre tonight. Syd Chaplin has the title role and the supporting cast is composed of players of wide repute.

As a stage play "Charley's Aunt" has already grossed over three million dollars and holds the money-making record for the stage. It has been produced in every civilized country in the world which, in addition to giving it an international reputation, has established it as a play with the basic qualites of farce comedy that can be appreciated and understood in any language.

"Charley's Aunt" was first produced at Bury St. Edmunds in Suffolk in 1892 with W. S. Penley starring, and was then brought to London, playing first at the Royalty Theatre and then at the Globe where it ran continuously for four years a total of 1,466 performances. The fame of "Charleys' Aunt" spread far and wide, and seven touring companies started out through the provinces. Several companies are still touring with it in England, and each year it is one of the "draws" of the holiday season.

Some of the great stage stars who have played in "Charley's Aunt" were the original W. S. Penley, who is said to have made a million and a half dollars out of it; Lyn Harding, Brandon Thomas, Miss Nina Boucicault, Julian Royce, Reeves Smith and A. E. Matthews. It was first played in America by Girardot.

The Christies gave this pictre an especially elaborate production and it is said to be the funniest feature that the screen has offered this season.

Favorable Crop Report Caused Drop In Wheat

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—(Canadian Press).—As the result of Government figures showing that the United States spring wheat crop is much larger than was expected, wheat underwent an early set-back in price to-day. On the downturn of values, however, active buying developed on the part of previous speculative sellers, who were in a position to collect a profit. Commission houses were also persistent buyers, but mostly in small lots. The opening, 3-4c to 2 1-8c lower, December 151⅝ to 152, and May 155⅜ to 156, was followed by something of a rally and then another sag. Corn and oats reflected wheat weakness which more than off-set the bullish influence of the Government report as to corn. Opening at 3-8c down to ¼c up, December 87¼ to 87½ cents, corn scored slight gains, but afterward showed losses all around. Oats started at ¼ to 3-4c off, December 42¾ to 42⅝. Later the market receded a little more. Higher quotations on hogs lifted provisions.

Small General Advance Made On Toronto Market

TORONTO, Sept. 10 (Canadian Press).—An active market was continued on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning, with a tone firmer than yesterday, a number of fair gains being recorded. Brazilian improved a quarter at 73 3-8, and Canadian Canners a half at 13 1-2. Canners Preferred being unchanged at 57. Another active issue, Dominion Stores Common, advanced 1 5-8 at 61 5-8, and Bank of Montreal was marked up 1 1-4 at 257 1-4. Atlantic Sugar Common, though active, dropped a quarter and Preferred eased an eighth. General Electric Preferred moved up 1 at 55, and British Columbia Fishing, after an active session, closed 3-4 higher at 47 1-4. Canadian Pacific Railway further improved its gain by a half point advance to 144.

Motor Shares Led In General Upward Move

NEW YORK, Sept. 10 (Canadian Press).—Responding to the lowering of call money rates and further indications of improving Fall business, stock prices moved upward again today under the leadership of motor shares, seven of which attained new peak prices for the year. Public participation was on a broader scale. Equipments responded to delayed railroad inquiries for cars and locomotives, and steels improved on a relatively small decrease of 26,664 tons on the August unfilled orders of the U. S. Steel Corporation. Violent upturns in some of the high priced industrial specialties followed a revival of rumors of capital readjustments throughout, stock split ups, and increased dividends. Speculative interest in rails was dampened by the failure of Southern Railway directors to increase the regular quarterly dividend on common stock which fell back about 3 points after announcements. Unexpected large sales following recent price cuts furnished background for another advance in motors, General Motors crossing 97 on large turnover. Pierce Arrow was heavy.

FACTS ABOUT OPTOMETRY

The Prevalence Of Far-Sight

It is the opinion of Optometrists that this error of vision is more often met with than any other. And in addition to being so prevalent, it is very detrimental. It is present in all ages, the majority of children being to some extent far-sighted. There is but one way to correct far-sight—placing glasses before the eyes that remove the error. We have success in such cases.

Meighen Lauds Bethany Helpers; Outlines Conservative Policies And Attacks Petersen Contract

Conservative Leader Given Ovation in East Centre District—Pays Graceful Tribute to Mrs. Howard Fallis and Galaxy of Speakers.

SMILES AT THE SENATE PROBLEM.

Hon. Dr. Manion Delivers Stirring Address and is Supported by Many Local Members—T. H. Stinson, of Lindsay, Presides at Big Gathering.

(By a Staff Reporter)

BETHANY, Sept. 11. —In bright warm weather to a great crowd assembled yesterday in a large tent on the Athletic ground at Bethany, where an outdoor picnic was held under the auspices of the East Centre district of the Liberal Conservative Association of Ontario, the Right Honorable Arthur Meighen outlined the policies on which he bases his appeal to the people of Canada for support in the coming general election. The meeting was presided over by T. H. Stinson, K.C. Prominent Conservatives on the platform and in the audience were: — Captain J. Thompson, Speaker of the Ontario Legislative Assembly; Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, Federal member for Fort William and Rainy River; Mrs. Howard Fallis, Peterborough; F. W. Bowen, M.P.P. (East Durham); W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., (W. Peterboro); M. E. Maybee, M.P., E. Northumberland); J. F. Strickland and V. J. McElderry, secretary and president respectively of the Liberal-Conservative Association of West Peterboro; C. H. Ackerman, and Roland Denne.

The Bethany band played patriotic selections which whiled away the tedium of waiting while the large crowd was expeditiously marshalled into the inadequate sitting accomodation of the tent. Mr. Meighen, who was a guest to luncheon at the home of F. W. Bowen arrived shortly after a o'clock and was given a vociferous welcome, the audience rising en masse as a mark of respect.

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen

Mr. Meighen opened his address by a graceful tribute to the merits of the previous speakers. He said he did not think he was ever called on to speak in a place where the work had been so well done. Those who had spoken before had left him with very little to say, save perhaps further to impress the facts to which they had given utterance. He wished to thank the other speakers, particularly Mrs. Fallis, for the nice things they had said about him. He had learned that speakers had to have these nice things said about them whether they were true or not. (Cries of "They are true.") He had always been anxious to hear Mrs. Fallis. He had not thought it was possible for a woman to compress, as Mrs. Fallis had done, the whole political dictionary into so short a space.

He was not there to look like a man hunted for offences. Premier King had been very abusive and seemed to think that an opposition should not oppose a government, especially such a sanctified government as the King administration. Last week at Richmond Hill and yesterday at Guelph, Mr. King claimed that the government had reduced debts by about 83 millions. Let them examine this achievement. Mr. King claimed that other things had not been achieved because the Conservative leader and his sinister efforts in the House had poured despair over the country and had driven the people south of the line, by saying they were not prosperous when they really were. Premier King said he had a majority, but it was one of quantity, not of quality. At another time he had described it as "not a visible majority." These things, claimed the Premier, had kept him from carrying out all the intentions of the Government.

Taxation

The only way to get at the facts was to examine the finance reports. Canada had two accounts—first, the ordinary accounts dealing with the ordinary business of the country; second, railways. The country owned the railways and had to face the account. Premier King in talking

Meighen Converted Lone Liberal In Bethany Crowd

On his way to the gathering at the outdoor picnic yesterday, the Right Honorable Arthur Meighen encountered a Liberal, who proudly asserted "that he would be the only Grit in the whole crowd." "He was a good looking, intelligent man," said Mr. Meighen, "and I am hoping he will yet make the meeting unanimous."

Shortly after the conclusion of the former Premier's speech the chairman, T. H. Stinson, made an announcement, saying he had received a message from the lone Liberal. It read: "I have heard Mr. Meighen. I am now prepared to make it unanimous."

RUSSIAN EMIGRES MEETING TO PLAN EXPULSION OF THE SOVIET

Will Organize All Emigrants Into Great White Congress.

TO NAME CHIEF.

Many Leaders Opposed to Monarchy—Not a Military Move This Time.

By A. L. Bradford
(United Press Staff Correspondent).

PARIS, Sept. 11.—Representatives of "White Russia"—an army of emigres clinging to the old Russia of the Czarist days — will meet in conference here Sunday to discuss their plans for wrestling that country from the Soviet grip.

The conference will name a committee of thirty which in turn will be charged with the organizing of "a great congress of Russian emigrants abroad."

How to make a common front against the Soviet will be the main theme of the delegates of the exiled, and probably the conference will include the naming of a single chief for the White Russia movement.

The Grand Duke Nicholas is favored for the post, though Grand Duke Cyril from his Cobourg, Germany, estate has recently sent forth to the world a manifesto saying that he is the rightful "Emperor of all the Russias."

The Bourgeois Republican Democrats among the emigres dislike the idea of any czarism being dragged into the conference, saying that this only weakens the cause, since Russia's peasants want no monarchy.

Delegates to the conference claim to believe that the time is right for pressing the "White" movement, which, however, does not partake of the military nature of the ill-fated Wrangel, Kolchak and other expeditions intended to crush the Soviet.

Embroidered Snakes Grace Patent Leather Shoes

LONDON, Sept. 11.—(United Press).—Jewelled heels are the latest fashion in smart evening wear for Londoners. The fashion started by the Duchess of York has rapidly been imitated throughout smart society, and now no ball-room fails to show many gold and silver heels set off by sparkling gems.

31 Liberals From West Is Hon. Chas. Stewart's Claim

WINNIPEG, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press.)—Return of thirty-one Liberals in the four western provinces was predicted here Thursday by Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, who is on his way to Edmonton to address his constituents.

"In the approaching appeal to the country I believe we will get eight seats in British Columbia, eight in Alberta, ten in Saskatchewan and five in Manitoba," Mr. Stewart said. "The big fight," he added, "is going to be in Ontario. I think Mr. Meighen may get 50 seats, but no more, in Ontario. Of course you can never tell what the public will do these days. Something happens overnight and there is a funeral the next morning."

FATALLY HURT IN LEAP OFF CAR

Arthur Desaulnier Died on Way to Hospital in Sudbury.

CAR WAS MOVING.

SUDBURY, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—Jumping without warning from a jitney as it was turning off a street into a lane Arthur Desaulnier, of Sturgeon Falls, sustained fatal injuries yesterday afternoon to which he succumbed while being rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital. Desaulnier was an assistant foreman with the northern development branch of the Espanola-Little Current Road.

TARIFF ON FRUIT TO HELP GROWER

Mr. Meighen Says Cream of Canadian Market Goes to Americans.

AT LEAMINGTON.

LEAMINGTON, Ont., Sept. 11 (By Canadian Press Staff Correspondent).—The benefit which he claimed the fruit and vegetable producing sections of Canada would derive from a protecting tariff was emphasized by the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, in an address before the electors of Kent and Essex Counties today.

Mr. Meighen arrived by motor from Windsor. The Conservative leader argued that the tariff which would keep the early fruits and vegetables of the United States growers from invading the Canadian market before our own products were ripe for eating could not but help Canadian growers. Under present conditions the high prices and the cream of the Canadian market went to the American growers. Again he emphasized tariff revisions on an upward basis as a fundamental need of the country. The present tariff he claimed, was at the root of the difficulties from which Canada suffered today.

A fierce controversy is raging in Cairo, Egypt, concerning the recent appearance of a number of Moslem girls on the stage.

GORDON TELLS PLAN TO HELP FARM SOLDIER

Will Consider Further Reduction in Values Set By Inflation.

SEES HANDICAP.

New Minister of Department Also Reaffirms His Immigration Policy.

Hon. G. N. Gordon, who was last Saturday elevated to the Cabinet as Minister of Immigration and Colonization, has since been given in addition the portfolio of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, bringing him into direct touch with every man of Canada's overseas forces. That he is not to be merely a figurehead in his department, or a rubber stamp for the officials there, is evidenced by the wide-awake interest he has already taken and the plans he has already formed for increasing the efficiency of administration and the benefits of the bureau to returned soldiers.

In an interview given The Examiner before his departure to Belleville this morning, Hon. Mr. Gordon told something of what he hopes to accomplish, indicating a great sympathy with the returned soldier struggling to make a living on a farm purchased under inflated values, and expressing the determination to formulate plans which he hopes will make life easier for such men.

Mr. Gordon was, as usual, busy. He could scarcely take time from the many duties that pressed upon him to answer the questions asked as to his policies, and seemed relieved when at last the reporter professed himself satisfied with the information he had obtained. The Minister of Immigration was about to leave by motor for Belleville, where he supported Premier King at a gathering this afternoon.

Reduce Values.

Recalling the fact that the returned soldiers who took up land under the settlement scheme had paid for their holdings at inflated prices then prevailing, Mr. Gordon pointed out how his government had reduced the valuations on which present payments are being made. "I am not sure," he said, 'that we have reached the right conclusion, or whether we have done enough, and I am having inquiries made to ascertain whether further reductions should be recommended."

This department, now referred to as the Soldiers' Land Settlement Department, is an important one to administer, and its expenditures run into millions of dollars a year. It is considered one of the most useful departments in the government.

Immigration Department.

Having paid a flying visit to his Department of Immigration, Hon. Mr. Gordon was able to reaffirm the statement made to The Examiner early this week, as to the Government's policy regarding immigration. "We are not seeking any industrial workers," he said, 'and we do not need urban settlers in Canada. Farm laborers are needed by the thousand, and if they will come in and agree to remain on the land they can be used. Ontario has been suffering from a shortage of farm labor for years, and I have been trying to get labor for some farmers in the county, succeeding only with great difficulty.

In Western Canada there are schools and roads ready, and many districts are awaiting settlers to fill in. They are ready there to receive men who can go on the land, who understand farming and are willing to share in the unparallelled opportunities that Canada offers."

QUITS POLITICS

HON. T. A. CRERAR.
Former leader of Federal Progresive party refused to submit his name to the convention at Shoal Lake, Man., on Sept 23. Personal reasons and the demands of his business as head of the United Grain Growers determined his decision.

ABOLITION OF APPOINTMENTS TO SENATE FOR LIFE IS PREMIER'S PROPOSAL FOR SENATE REFORM

Statement Made at Cayuga in Answer to Mr. Meighen's Challenge.

"SPECIFIC PROPOSAL."

Says New Senators Were Chosen Because They Favored Changes in Senate.

CAYUGA, Sept. 11.—One specific measure of "Senate Reform" was proposed by Premier King at Cayuga yesterday afternoon when he committed himself and his Government to press for the abolition of life appointments to the Senate. This utterance was made in answer to the challenge of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen at Wingham in which he said that Premier King did not have one single proposal of reform for the Senate to which he dare commit his Government. The major portion of the address of the Prime Minister was a reply to the "falsehood and misrepresentation" of Mr. Meighen's Wingham address. Premier King took his own address given at Richmond Hill on Saturday and that of Mr. Meighen, and contrasted them. He asked all electors to do the same thing, and then to exercise their franchise, according to the manner such as scrutiny directed them. Mr. King characterized Mr. Meighen's policy on the National Railways as one of political interference which Sir Henry Thornton would not tolerate.

Protection Has been Beaten Before

He said the Conservative Leader's proposals on the tariff were identical with the platform of high protection on which Mr. Meighen went down to inglorious defeat in 1921 Mr. Meighen, he continued, was still doubtful if he was really defeated on that measure. "The fact was," said the Premier, "he had the stuffing knocked out of him so badly that he has never been able to get a correct orientation of himself since."

As regards Mr. Meighen's assertions that hundreds of factories have closed in Canada because of the inimical tariff of the King Government the Prime Minister said he would reply to that in his address at Belleville. Moreover, he would take this opportunity of not only serving no-

Hay Fever Convention Was Almost Sneezeless

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—Like the Japanese who leave their sandals at the door of their homes before entering, 150 hay fever sufferers from the far corners of Canada and the United States left their sneezes at the entrance of Duluth and conducted an almost sneezeless convention here last night.

There was some sneezing; one speaker was woefully embarrassedd. He spoke on "How to cure hay-fever," using himself as an illustrative subject upon whom the cure was tested. He sneezed.

MILLIONS OF TONS OF COAL HELD OWNERS TRY TO FORCE UP PRICE

Speculators Seek to Create an Artificial Shortage in New York.

AUTHORITIES TOLD.

Figures of Two Companies Show 400,000 Tons on River Barges.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11. — (United Press).—Approximately two million tons of coal are being held on barges in and around New York to force upward the prices, the police were told by some rail dealers today. Speculators are attempting to create an artificial shortage, sending the price of coal to $20 a ton, it is charged. To support these claims, figures prepared by tow company officials showing that 400,000 tons of coal are on barges in the Hudson and East Rivers were handed over to the authorities.

Rum Running Baronet Will Make Another Try

LONON, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press). — Despite the heavy losses rumored to have been suffered in the last year by those financing contraband liquor shipments to the United States, Sir Broderick Hartwell, the rum running baronet, is soliciting financial backing for further activities. In circulars to the stockholders of his former enterprise, he announced that he has joined up with the Bahamas International Trading Co., and will attempt to land liquor cargoes in the United States through that organization if more money is advanced.

ATTRACTIVE EXHIBITS GRACE SECOND ANNUAL FLOWER SHOW IN SPITE OF PEST TROUBLES

Fervent Farewell To Prince Pretty Girl Embraces Him

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 11—(United Press).—Embraced by a beautiful girl in black as he was departing to spend to-day at Vinadal Mar, the Prince of Wales responded with a hand shake. The mysterious girl in black had fought her way through the crowd at the railway station, including prominent Chilean officials.

"Excuse me, Prince," she said, giving him a smile that would win a less impressionable youth than the heir to the Throne of Britain.

Then as the officials looked on, aghast at her daring, the girl warmly embraced him. The Prince appeared embarrased a moment, but quickly recovered his poise. He extended his hand in cordial acknowledgment of the more fervent farewell.

JUDGE ENTHUSES.

Second Night Will Be Featured By Many New Attractions.

The second annual Flower Show held under the auspices of the Peterboro Horticultural Society opened last evening in the Armories. The exhibits are not as numerous this year as last season, owing to a great extent to the prevalence in this district of some extremely lively and energetic flower pests which have ravaged the gardens hereabout and done incalculable damage to this year's blooms.

The tables are attractively arranged with green and white paper coverings and evergreen boughs, and the wall pieces are very good, notably that of Joseph Grierson, which received special mention from the judge, G. Baldwin, F.R.H.S., of Toronto, who also spoke appreciatively of the showing of house plants and the children's exhibit.

J. H. Callander has a splendid showing of gladioli from the "Flower dale" gardens, including several spikes of the new "Los Angeles" variety, shrimp pink, with the pale yellow Flora, the lovely Red Emperor, and the pinkish mauve Louise prominent specimens. W. H. Young has some lovely gladioli also, from "Ingledean Gardens," along with single asters and salpiglossis, in a very attractively-arranged collection.

One of the most noticeable classes is that of cut flowers, in which two exceptionally pretty pieces are the large silver urn filled with feathery cosmos in varying shades and a lovely little basket of mauve-blue scabiosa, with its lacy fringes. A large bouquet is composed of asters and zinnias, interspersed with yellow African ball marigolds.

Zinnias are amongst the healthiest looking of the plants on view. Perhaps the pests do not admire these odd, stiff, decorative blooms, with their carefully-laid petals and peculiar, off-tone shades, that include out of the way colors in maroons and pale oranges, bricks, hennas, terra cottas, dull purples and even greens. Two of the large blooms are colored a faint green throughout.

The wall arrangements, with flowers and plants displayed on tiers, covered with bright papers, were es-

HAMILTON APPROVES. AUTOMATIC SIGNAL

Lights Flashing For Traffic Are Most Effective in Centre of Crossings.

In connection with Ald. Crowe's report to the Council relative to automatic signals, the Toronto Star Weekly carried the following as to the attitude of the City of Hamilton in the same matter:

W. G. Robertson, secretary of the Ontario Motor League, points out that at certain intersections the overhead automatic signal lights, if located in the centre of the crossings, would be more efficient because much more visible and conspicuous than at the corners. This is particularly true where there are electric signs or branches of trees to confuse or obstruct the view. Mr. Robertson stated that at the Delta, one of Hamilton's most dangerous intersections, the centralized light signals have been successfully installed, depending from wires stretched across the intersection from poles located at the curbs on the sidewalks in much the same way the trolley power wires are suspended.

The report from the Hamilton Motor Club (O.M.L.) on the automatic signal light installation in the ambitious city in part declares:

"With installation of overhead traffic signals at the Delta and at Cannon and James Streets, the problem of successful traffic regulation in Hamilton seems to be solved. Members of the City Council are highly pleased with the result attained by these automatic traffic regulators and more will be placed at uptown intersections without delay. Hamilton has been striving for several years to discover some signal, which would serve its purpose without constituting an obstruction to traffic, and apparently this signal has been found.

"The signals can be seen by the approaching motorist for some distance. They flash alternately red and green, the red for 'stop' and the green for 'go' with an amber light giving warning of change of signal and so to clear the intersection. Motorists have been quick to accustom themselves to the automatic signals and with the installation of several more at suitable intersections several policemen now regulating traffic will be released for other duty, thus saving the city thousands of dollars a year."

"BRINGING UP FATHER" — Geo. McManus

DYNAMO FROM ELECTRIC CITY IS HON. GEORGE N. GORDON

New Minister of Immigration Has Grasp of Problem That Confronts Dominion.

SAYS CONTEMPORARY

He Does Things and Gets Things Done—Will Consult Sifton.

(From The Toronto Star).

The Hon. George Newcombe Gordon, the new Minister of Immigration in the Dominion Government, who is in Toronto, and who spoke along with Premier King and the Peel candidate, Mr. Percy Parker, at the Liberal picnic at Erindale Wednesday afternoon, is, to put on him a well-known label which not all men of reputed driving power can wear with as much justification as he, an extremely forceful personality.

No one can obtain a Cabinet post four years after his first entrance into the Federal arena without being in possession of some masterful qualities. No one can accuse Lucien Cannon, the new Solicitor-General, who is only 38 years of age, of being a political shrinking violet or a tongue-tied orator, but Mr. Cannon took 14 years to accomplish what Mr. Gordon has done in four.

And yet he passed the bulk of those four years as Deputy-Speaker and had no tongue but as the House commanded him. He has made a position which, though honorable, has been regarded as a species of political oblivion, a stepping stone to real political power. Which proves that Mr. Gordon, in addition to his vigor and aggressiveness, has the valuable faculty of being able to listen.

He is not the youngest of the Cabinet Ministers, but still he is young, even as Liberal Cabinets go, and a comparative child as Conservative Cabinets go. He is 46, but with his burly athletic frame, clean-cut features and square, clean-shaven chin, might be taken to be still in his third decade.

Antidote to Blue Ruin.

All this youth, punch and health and optimism are particularly suitable in a Minister of Immigration. Not only physically but mentally he is a tonic and antidote to the preachers of blue ruin. In a breezy talk he in five minutes blew great ragged holes in the fog that Tory pessimism has distilled around conditions in Canada, and particularly the prospects of renewed immigration.

"Immigrants," said he, "we can get immigrants, the very best of agricultural immigrants. We are getting right now any number of prosperous western American farmers. There is a real exodus into Canada from Iowa, the two Dakotas and other Western States. Our last two valuable wheat crops have been a wonderful advertisement to Canada in the Western States. The number of immigrants has doubled in that quarter this year. My policy will be to help that movement along, to lure back to Canada Ontario and other farmers who settled in Western States, and also to bring out English cattlemen and dairy men, than whom there are none better."

The new Minister is not one of those men who hits down and lets things happen. As The Star talked to him he was up every five minutes to answer a long distance telephone call, for he is not merely one of the bubbles around the brim of the now boiling political kettle. He is a big part of the commotion in the very centre of the cauldron.

Unanswerable Figures.

When he wasn't telephoning he was diving into a bulky brief bag to bring out statistics of Canadian prosperity, the road of the financial and commercial swell that proves that there are good times ahead.

"Look at the record of our stock market," said he. "Compare the prices of such securities as C.P.R., Steel Company of Canada, Dominion Bridge, Shawinigan, our pulp and paper companies to-day and in 1921. The market is discounting good times. Canadian stocks, for instance, added $100,000,000 to its value, and and much of the stock is held by employees. The wheat crops are making the west throb with activity. The balance of trade is much in our favor. We are making a start on paying off our debt. We are building up a big business abroad. Our new West Indian treaty alone is going greatly to expand our foreign trade. That West India trade grew in 25 years from 3 million to 25 million dollars with little encouragement. With the stimulus of this treaty it will become a big thing.

"In short," said he, "the only man in Canada who can be a pessimist, or who has any reason to be a pessimist, is Arthur Meighen. He has little reason for optimism, for he has got to win 67 additional seats to get a majority of one, and he can't get one friendly smile from the West."

It was Mr. Gordon who drove the first nail into the Meighen political coffin. That was in a by-election in West Peterboro in February, 1921, when he defeated H. Burnham. That was the storm sequel of the cyclone that swept Mr. Meighen from power in 1921. It was in political prophetic value analogous to Charles Hanna's defeat of Gus Porter in the by-election in Hastings.

An Interesting Career.

Mr. Gordon at that time was a young Peterboro alderman. He had taught in a country school. He had been a newspaper man. He had then gone into law, in consequence of a dispute over a point of law with his city editor, as a result of which he was fired.

He was called to the bar in 1905 and was later solicitor for the City of Peterboro. He had only aldermanic and municipal experience when in 1921 he was selected out of many candidates as the David to oppose Mr. Burnham. The wise old fellows shook their heads at sending a boy on such an errand, but the enthusiasm of Mr. Gordon's have added $100,000,000 to its value, friends was a big asset.

In the general elections of December, 1921, he trounced Mr. Burnham by double his February majority. He was a species of youthful dynamo, and he came from an electric city, but he hid his political illumination as if it were a candle under the bushel of the Deputy Speakership.

Now that he has taken off the shade it is certain that he is going to shed considerable light on the problem of immigration. He has already announced that he is going to seek the advice of Sir Clifford Sifton, the most enterprising and successful Minister of Immigration Canada ever had. This young Cabinet Minister, who is a go-getter, is not altogether going to go it on his own, but will make himself the synopsis of all contemporary wisdom and courage in this matter.

May Be Shake-up.

He is going to shake up his department if it needs shaking up. "We will certainly eliminate the unfit from the immigration service," said he. "Of course in our appointments we must co-operate with the Civil Service Commission, which by its standards of examination is a good sifter out of incompetence. If, however, there is any long-standing dead wood suffering from dry rot it will be removed."

As Minister of Immigration he ought to be able to attract outdoor men, for he is addicted to the outdoor life. He has lots of open space and verandahs around his home in Peterboro. He has a frame that looks suited for 300 yard drivers, but he does not boast about his golf. His most successful driving is in his motor.

Peterboro is on the threshold of the lake region, and Mr. Gordon's greatest pleasure is to get into a motor car with a rod and line and to drive up into the rocks and to rough it in search of bass.

A Minister of Immigration's business is with the young and adventurous rather than the old and cautious.

Two or three nights a week it is the custom for Mr. and Mrs. Gordon and their young son to go into the north part of the county on a fishing expedition. If, on these occasions, they can cast a line in the early evening, that is the most pleasant part of the day's work, as much enjoyed by Mr. Gordon as by his wife and his 13-year-old son.

Calls on Manufacturers.

All told, a talk with our new immigration director convinces one that he is youthful, alert, aggressive, optimistic and not likely to succumb to the taboos and languors that have checked the once rushing tide of influx.

"The tide of immigration," said he, "is setting our way and I want the Canadian manufacturer to be just as loyal as the Canadian workman in buying the products of Canada and so providing prosperity for the workers we now have and the workers to come. But if you look into the question you will find that a great many Canadian manufacturers are putting into so-called made-in-Canada goods a lot of imported material which they could buy at home. They should be consistent with their own avowed principles."

WHITE SCHOOL IN FIRST PLACE IN FAIR PARADE

MANY COMPETITIONS.

Athletic Events and Farm Exhibit Were Well Contested.

(By a Staff Reporter.)

WARKWORTH, Sept. 11. — The school near Bradley's Corners, No. 3 Percy and 29 Brighton Township, a portion of the section being in each, won first place in the parade at the School Fair, held on Thursday in Warkworth. This school, known as the White school, now eligible to compete for the special cash prize which the directors of the Percy Agricultural Society offer at their Fall Fair, the competition to be limited to the nine winners of first honors in the County of Northumberland. The first prize will be $15, the second $10, the third $7.50 and the fourth $5. This is a novel feature at an Agricultural Fair and one which it is expected will prove popular.

The teacher of the White school is Miss Jennie Dilsworth, who resides in the section and who received her primary education in the institution in which she now presides. She is ambitious, filled with energy and has already established a reputation as a successful instructor in class work and in physical exercises that to-day hold such a prominent place in education. Miss Dilsworth won out yesterday among seven close competitors and her friends, when tendering their congratulations, expressed the hope that she and her pupils would be able to give as good an account of themselves when they compete at the Warkworth Fair with the winners from the various parts of the county. She had 23 pupils in the parade yesterday.

Other Schools Represented.

The other schools that took part in the parade were: No. 16, 20 pupils, Miss Helen A. Mowat, teacher; No. 8 (Dutch Line), 15 pupils; No. 5, 21 pupils, Miss Sarah Moise, teacher; No. 7, 22 pupils, Miss B. Merrill, teacher; No. 6, 23 pupils, Miss Ora Goodfellow, teacher; Norham school, 20 pupils, Miss Laurel Arkles, teacher.

Norham school won second prize, No. 8 third and No. 7 fourth.

Other Prize Winners.

Girls' race, 9 to 12—Frances Convey, Bessie Grant, Alice Convey, Gladys McVety.

Boys' race, under 9—Charles Ewing, Merrill Nelson, Philip Conway, Donald Parks.

Boys' Three-leg race—Hayden Ewing and Arthur Grills, Neil Pettifer and Owen Hockey, Will Pettifer and James Convey.

Girls' rcae, under 9.—Annie Grant, Margaret Nelson, Jean Bowen, Irene Plumpton.

Girls' Three-leg race — Vivian Huycke and Francis Convey, Nellie Gretnley and Edith Richards, Alice Taylor and May McCurdy.

Boys' Relay race—W. Pettifer, Arthur Grills and Hayden Newman of the Norham School.

Teachers and Trustees.

Two of the feature events on the programme of sports were the teachers' and trustees races. Miss Dilsworth, whose school took first prize in the parade, won the teachers' race easily, with Beatrice Merril of No. 7 second, Cora Goodfellow of No. 6, third, and Mary Pettey of No. 18, fourth.

After a good deal of persuasion four trustees lined up for that race —Bruce King, Fred Huycke, Felix Convey and Joe Pickens. The latter was left at the post, but the other three covered the distance. The 50-yard record was not broden, but the contestants ran earnestly, Mr. King putting the first crimp in the tape, Mr. Convey coming in second, and Mr. Huycke a good third.

The Judges.

Everything went off without a hitch, thanks to the careful arrangements of all the details made by District Representative Smith and his assistants. Mr. Smith and Kenneth Crews of Brighton judged the parade, Mr. Crews also acting as judges of the races, the grains, fruits and vegetables the exhibits in the domestic science department, flowers, etc., were judged by Mrs. W. H. Smith and Mrs. Leo. Goodrich of Brighton; B. J. Philp of Brighton judged the poultry, and C. W. Armstrong of the same village acted as judge of sports and of exhibits in the hall.

The specimens of grain and fruits shown were especially fine. There were sheaves of oats five feet in length and heavily loaded, the heads on the wheat sheaves were long and plump, and the apples were free from blight of any kind.

Hayden, son of Ernest Smith of Dartford, showed a sheaf of fodder corn, the longest stalks in which was 13½ feet in length. This corn was grown in the garden from seed furnished by the Department, but Mr. Smith said he has corn growing in his field from seed which he purchased that is taller than that in his son's experimental plant.

The balance of the list of prize winners will be published later.

FOUND SON DEAD IN BEAVER RIVER

Mr. Snowdon, of Cannington, Made Startling Discovery Yesterday.

CHILD NOT DROWNED.

LINDSAY, Ont., Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—A fatality occurred at the village of Cannington on Thursday, when Mr. Snowdon found the body of his three-year-old son floating down the Beaver River. All efforts at resuscitation were in vain. No water was found in the child's lungs, so it is believed he must have fallen off a bridge, striking his head.

CHIEF TO ACT AS TRUANT OFFICER

J. R. Wilkinson Has Received Notice of Dismissal From School Board.

FOR ECONOMY.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 11.—J. R. Wilkinson yesterday received a communication from Wesley Stephens, secretary of the Board of Education, informing him that Police Chief Brown had been appointed truant officer, a position which Mr. Wilkinson has held for the past three years. The change has been made not because of any objection to the service rendered by Mr. Wilkinson, but in the interest of economy, as Chief Brown will act as truant officer without extra pay.

At the sale of home cooking which will be held to-morrow afternoon by the ladies of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, a special supper will be served from 6 to 8 p.m., and not from 3 to 5, as stated in the advertisement which appeared yesterday.

$6,000 FARM LOSS

Lightning Destroys Barn and Season's Crops.

OTTAWA, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press).—Two bolts of lightning from a storm which passed over the district early Thursday morning set fire to a large barn owned by Ezra Lavere, situated about five miles from Kemptville, and also resulted in the death of two horses and two cows.

The first bolt of lightning struck the barn, causing it to take fire. The barn, which contained farm machinery, and practically all of the season's field crops, was destroyed, as were also the two horses, at an estimated loss of $6,000, part of which is covered by insurance.

A second bolt of lightning killed two cows owned by Mrs. James Sabourin, a neighbor of Mr. Lavere. The cows were standing underneath a tree when the lightning struck it.

LONDON, September 11. Canadian Press. — The racing career of "Manna,' H. E. Morris' great three-year-old, which won this year's derby and two thousand guineas, was ended with yesterday's running of the St. Leger stakes. OTHER ORNAMENTS.

CHILLICOTHE, Ohio., Sept. 11 —Canadian Press. — The discovery of thousands of pearls, many of enormous size and exquisite color, which ages ago swathed the bodies of four mound builders, believed to have been of royal linage, marked the beginning of what is expected to be the most valuable find of mound builders in recent years. Cophelmets covered the skulls of two, while ornaments of tortoise snell, pottery heads, copper and silver were found in profusion.

COMMUNITY CLUB HAS BEEN FORMED

Business Men's Outing Club Has Grown Into New Society.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 11. — The Campbellford Community Club was organized at a well attended meeting held, Wednesday night in the store of A. G. Watson & Son, this being a development of the Business Men's Outing Club, a temporary organization that sponsored the community picnic recently held. The officers of the new club are the same as those of the old, with the addition of D. A. Montgomery, who was elected Treasurer. J. Nelson Stone is President and Frank Mennie is Secretary. The latter reported that their was a surplus of $1.10 in the treasury after all the expenses in connection with the recent picnic had been paid.

On motion of J. I. Adams, it was decided to make a community picnic an annual event, and to hold it earlier in the season than the date of the one this year. The club can be called together in the spring so that all arrangements can be made on time for the big holiday.

On motion of F. W. Wood and J. I. Adams, a vote of thanks was tendered W. J. Dagleish, Robert Irwin and John Simpson, owners of the grounds where the picnic was held, and to all those who donated the use of their cars to transport the crowd to Crowe River Bridge.

Messrs. Irwin and Simpson, who were at the meeting last night, own the land where the baseball diamond is located. Volunteer workers will gather on Friday afternoon, September 25, to level the diamond with plows, scrapers and shovels.

CALGARY, Alta., Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—Eight thousand acres of cultivated land was added to the total acreage signed up with the Alberta Wheat Pool on Tuesday of this week.

Four thousand acres is the daily average of increase in the acreage under pool contract in Alberta at present. Not since the early campaigns for membership in Alberta has the increase been so rapid as at the present time.

TOMORROW'S APPEAL.

Tomorrow the Children's Aid Society is asking the people of Peterboro to assist through the medium of a tag day in the financing of the work of the Society for the next year.

The answer should be commensurate to the value of the Society's activities to the community.

If the reclaiming, from homes where the conditions prevent any chance of success in life, of neglected and destitute children and the development of such children into independent and useful members of society is an asset to Peterboro—and the Examiner is sure that no other view is possible—then tomorrow's appeal should be generously answered.

The Children's Aid Society inaugurated the tag day method of collecting funds in Peterboro feeling that such a plan offered a medium by which the whole community could contribute, thus dividing the burden among many without pressing heavily upon anybody.

A multitude of small contributions tomorrow, therefore, would provide sufficient funds, it is hoped, to meet the heavy overhead involved in the work of caring for neglected children, the expenses in connection with which are growing heavier each year.

Give generously tomorrow and have the satisfaction of knowing that you are assisting a splendid organization do a splendid work.

THE FLOWER SHOW.

The Peterboro Horticultural Society deserves credit for the efforts it has been making to stimulate a love of flowers among citizens generally, and especially in its campaign to interest children in gardening.

The annual lawn and garden competition cannot fail to have a very beneficial effect, while the Flower Show, at present being held in the Armouries, provides a further inspiration to citizens to pay greater attention to their flowers, with results that are to be seen not only at the Show itself but generally throughout Peterboro.

The impression created upon visitors who drive along streets lined with fine lawns and beautiful gardens, with flowers to be seen everywhere, is a fine advertisement for Peterboro as a city in which it is good to live, and the Horticultural Society can justly claim credit for being responsible to a considerable extent for the improved conditions in many parts of the city.

The Flower Show contains much to interest visitors, and the Armouries should be visited by a big crowd tonight.

The Chamber of Commerce is very actively co-operating with the Society in the arrangements for the annual Show, again demonstrating its willingness to assist in all worth-while community events.

THE MATTER OF CONVENTIONS.

The opposition that developed in the City Council to the Fire Chief's attendance at the convention of International Fire Chiefs is not difficult to understand; it is a time when economy is demanded and a saving would be effected if there was no grant made for this purpose.

But the main point to be remembered is that if the majority of cities tried to save money in this way it would be impossible to hold such conventions, and the great benefits to be gained by an interchange of ideas and methods would be lost.

No city can live unto itself alone.

There are certain obligations to one's neighbor, certain responsibilities along the line of co-operation, for the general good.

Conventions of municipal employees, police, firemen, etc., cannot fail to be of value, and their upkeep must be the common task of all.

It would be undignified for any one community to attempt to take advantage of the benefits of the co-operation of others without doing its share of the work.

INVITE YOUR FRIENDS.

How about inviting your out-of-town friends to visit the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition next week?

You know that to Toronto families the Canadian National Exhibition means the time when they sleep on the kitchen floor to make room for their friends from outside.

That may be a trifle exaggerated, but at least it is true that Queen City folks are generous in their hospitality at Exhibition times, and that generosity is reflected in the attendance at the world's greatest annual fair.

Peterboro will have plenty to show her visitors at the Industrial Exhibition next week, plenty of features which they will be glad to see.

Why not, you citizens of Peterboro, give them a chance to see how fast the Exhibition is growing by asking them to come and visit you next week?

It will mean an increased attendance at the Exhibition, it will please them and will give you a glow of satisfaction at having been instrumental in bringing about both these happy results.

Think it over—and write your friends.

LICENSES FOR DRIVERS.

Hon. Geo. S. Henry, Minister of Highways in Ontario, has at last definitely announced that next year every person driving a motor car in the Province will be compelled to take out a license.

The step has been anticipated for some time, and will meet with a considerable measure of approval.

It is felt that under a license system not only can permits be refused to those who are physically or mentally unfit to operate cars, but the elimination of reckless and careless motorists will be facilitated.

Under the plan now proposed all convictions for offences against the traffic regulations will be noted on the licenses, and a driver who makes a bad showing in this respect can speedily be deprived of his right to handle a car.

The Deputy Minister of Highways told a local gathering early in the spring that the Government proposed to make drivers' licenses easy to secure, but also easy to lose, intimating that the man who showed himself careless of the safety of others will not long enjoy the privilege of sitting behind a steering wheel.

Hitherto there has been practically no regulations so far as non-professional drivers are concerned.

Anybody old enough has been allowed to drive, and it has been impossible to check up as closely as will be feasible under the license system going into force next year.

THE NEW EMPIRE.

The most important and far-reaching event recently in Great Britain has been the complete reorganization of the Colonial Office in Downing Street.

After 149 years Britain has done precisely what George Washington demanded. She has granted absolute self-government and representation in Parliament to her Dominions.

There is no longer to be any interference from Downing Street. Neither is there to be any more taxation without representation.

The Colonial Office has been told to let the Dominions alone. It is henceforth to have nothing to do with Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Ulster and the Irish Free State. These are the six Dominions. They are now practically on the same basis as Great Britain herself.

A new secretary of state for the Dominions is to be appointed. Temporarily the place is being filled by Mr. Amery.

Also, a parliamentary under-secretary is to be appointed. He is to be the official voice of the Dominions in the British Parliament. He will represent 18,000,000 self-governing Britishers who live overseas.

At the moment Lord Clarendon is acting as Under-Secretary. Eventually a man chosen by the Dominions themselves will probably hold this position.

There are now two distinct offices—the Dominion office and the Colonial office. They are, as yet, under the same roof; but they have independent staffs and are in no way related to each other.

For 20 years there have been two sets of officials—the Dominion set and the Colonial set; but Britain held back from recognizing openly and officially that the Dominions were not colonies of a higher grade.

Pressure from the Dominions has compelled Britain to take this final step and to cut the last of the leading-strings that bound her Dominions.

At last, after five generations of delay, the Declaration of Independence has been officially accepted and endorsed by the British Government.

There is not a demand in the Declaration that has not been granted to Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Ulster and the Irish Free State.

The fact is that all the Dominions have become practically independent since the close of the war.

The Imperial Conference brought all the Prime Ministers together for the first time and a common policy appears to have been unofficially agreed upon.

Since then they have adopted a quid pro quo policy in their dealings with Great Britain; and they have objected to any interference from the British Government.

Australia now has an official representative in London, who is to be consulted by the British Cabinet on any matter that concerns Australia.

Canada is about to appoint a representative to safeguard Canadian interests; and the other four Dominions will probably follow suit.

So there may soon be a group of six Dominion representatives sitting in the outer circle of the British Cabinet.

How long will it be, ask those who are watching these developments, before the Dominion representatives are in the inner circle of the Cabinet?

Already, so Mr. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, told me, more than half of the volume of trade in the British Empire is outside of Great Britain.

Industrially Canada is more prosperous than England. Her wealth is now $22,000,000,000. She is richer per capita than England. She has 41,000 manufacturing establishments, with an output of $1,150,000,000.

Australia is handicapped by her Labor governments, but her people are prosperous and very few are unemployed.

The Labor party has quite given up its opposition to the development of the Empire, since it had the experience of nine months in power.

No one is a more enthusiastic Empire builder at the moment, for instance, than J. H. Thomas, the head of the Railroad Men's Union.

Britain is determined to produce her own cotton and wheat and meat and sugar inside her own Empire. She has now picked up the policy which Joseph Chamberlain originated, nearly twenty-five years ago—the policy of creating a self-contained Empire, as united as the United States, with free trade inside her own borders.

In short, it is now known that Prime Minister Baldwin has become a convert to the Chamberlain policy since his visit to America.

He recently told his Cabinet that "England must follow the American policy of conserving home markets. We must do as they do," he said, "keep to ourselves and develop our own resources."—Written from London for the Wall St. Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Let us make it 30,000 in 1925.

Peterboro's Industrial Exhibition will be as the circus bills used to say, "Bigger, better and grander than ever."

The menu announced for Ontario's jails indicates that the man who is inside looking out has at least no fear of starvation.

Leaders of the striking miners say that the rise in the price of coal is rank profiteering. But the public has to pay anyway.

In one of the States across the line a squad of reformers propose to censor the Mother Goose books, eliminating all references to drinking or smoking.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

POLITICAL REVIEW.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Perhaps you will not object to a short review of the political situation. Mr. King has gone to the country because he wants a clear majority. He says, and says truly, that the group system which people went crazy about a little while ago makes it impossible for any single group when it gets in power to carry out its policies and principles.

Mr. King must be given every credit for his courage in making that statement. It is sure to offend some people, and if Mr. King were a mere contemptible thimble-rigging politician who cared nothing for the country and only for power, he would do in the future as he has often been compelled to do in the past—that is, sacrifice his principles to the necessity of the occasion and keep in power at all hazards. It is that sort of think that is mining this country and people, and therefore when Mr. King refuses any longer to sacrifice this country for the sake of keeping in power and demands a clear majority, or else declares that he will keep on going to the country until the situation is cleared up, as it should be, I say Mr. King is a statesman and deserves to be thought well of by the country. But while Mr. King's principles in that regard are of the highest merit, I must beg leave to differ from him in other particulars.

For example, he has declared for maintenance of the British preference, a thing condemned by Great Britain herself, who condemns all preference and who, when she adopted the highest form of protection in what she calls her "key" industries—that is, industries upon which the kingdom depends for its safety—she refused to give the rest of the Empire any preference. There was her chance to return the compliment without compromising her free trade principles, but she would have none of it.

Great Britain is right. A preference, like a bounty, is the most vicious form of policy, and Great Britain's example in that particular we should follow. Therefore, we should do away with all preferences.

A flagrant example of how a preference works is given us in the fact that Germany ships goods through Great Britain to Canada and gets the benefit of the British preference. We are making fools of ourselves by some of our policies, and this is one of them.

Then Mr. King and Mr. Gordon, his new Minister, are in favor of continuing to bonus people to come to this country. That is the craziest of all the policies. If we can't handle the people we have here now and make them and this great, rich country prosperous and happy, how are we going to do it by spending money to bring more people here?

We do not lack people, but we do lack a proper distribution of those we have already. For example, if our many idle men and women would hire out to the farmer, the whole situation of unemployment would be settled, but they won't do it. And experience has shown that people brought in as immigrants won't do it, and so the towns are flooded with idle men and women and the farmer can't get enough help. That is the problem to be solved, not piling on the agony and making the situation worse.

Therefore, I say that Mr. King and Mr. Gordon are dead wrong in their immigration policy, which will make things far worse than they are now, and perhaps run us into serious trouble.

Then I cannot agree with Mr. King and Mr. Gordon in their recently announced policy of "Tariff for revenue only." The Prime Minister boldly repeated this at his picnic in his own riding on Monday last, and he has repeated it frequently since. His policy is no longer the Fielding policy of moderate protection. It is the old Alexander MacKenzie free trade policy of tariff for revenue, and not for protection. It is to me a very strange thing that a man as clever as Mr. King will not see that under a high protection demanded by farmers, as well as others, the U. S. has prospered amazingly, so much so that our own people rush to it and that Great Britain is suffering fearful penalties for her adherence to free trade, and yet Mr. King copies the country that is suffering and rejects the example of the country that is prospering. He needn't be afraid of our farmers because they demand protection against New Zealand butter and the absolute exclusion of oleomargarine. And, further, our Canadian farmers are perfectly satisfied with the prices of all they want, as those prices are in the U. S., such as American agricultural machinery, auto trucks, clothes, boots and shoes, etc. In other words, if they had American prices for what they buy they would welcome protection, and therefore, the proper policy is not to reject protection for Canada, but to see to it that American prices shall prevail in Canada.

Mr. King's meetings so far have been poorly attended. The old policies of both parties have been tried and found wanting. The policy of more parties has also been tried and found wanting no more parties or groups. Both parties need a prompt readjustment of their policies. Conservatives must demand American prices to the consumer under protection, and then even the farmer will be satisfied with protection, and Mr. King must keep out cheap German goods and give up the idea that Great Britain and Canada want a preference. They do not. Mr. King says he is in the middle of the road. Well, he had better get out of it or he will be run over. But, as I have said, I give him unlimited credit for demanding a showdown by the people one way or the other.

But, unfortunately, Mr. King and Mr. Gordon promise no relief for the present condition of things. The country is in a bad state and yet they have no new remedy to suggest. I cannot congratulate him on that. We simply cannot go on as things are at present. Just think of it! Here we are babbling about bringing people into this country at big expense from the old countries when the record was beaten by over seven thousand in the number of Canadians going from Canada to the U. S. for the port of Ogdensburg alone in August. Our immigration policy should be to get these people back and to keep others here.

It is mere foolishness to talk of an immigration policy while this exodus is going on, for either party. It is gross mismanagement by all parties that such things should happen. Our public men are not equal to the emergency. We have as fine a country as the sun shines on, and yet people are leaving it as if it had the plague. Let us remember that free trade as it is in England will put us where England is, and that protection as it is in the U. S. ought to put us where that nation is. Which do you want? Then vote for it.

A prominent citizen surprised me the other day by quoting the fact that our export of manufactures to the U. S. exceeds that of the U. S. to us. That is true. But what makes it so is our export of pulpwood to the U. S. The U. S. takes our pulp and makes it into paper. We should do that ourselves. The U. S. makes enormously out of our supplying this raw material. And it is only by exaggerating that it can be called an article manufactured by Canada. However, the exodus continues and the reason is that there is more work in making paper in the U. S. than in making pulp in Canada.

STERLING RATES.

Sterling demand $4.84¼.

Sterling cables $4.85.

MONTREAL GRAIN.

MONTREAL, Sept. 10—There was a slight improvement in the demand from English importers for grain on the Montreal market today and on the decline in prices at Winnipeg, exporters were in a position to accept some of the bids received with the result that a moderate amount of business was worked in Manitoba spring wheat, oats and barley for nearby shipment and some barley for October and November loading.

The only business of importance in the local cash grain market was the sale of some No. 2 Northern wheat at 22 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg October option, extra No. 1 feed oats at nine cents per bushel, over, and No. 3 barley at 79 cents per bushel. C. I. F. Montreal The market for Canadian Western oats was weaker and prices were stronger owing to the smaller offerings and the good demand for the same and sales of car lots of No. 2 White were made at 50½ cents, No. 3 White at 49½ cents, and No. 4 at 47 cents per bushel, ex-track.

EGG PRICES.

OTTAWA, Sept. 10 — The Egg market continues firm with strong undertone. Some shipments show a very heavy percentage of inferior eggs in the receipts, eggs which evidently have been held for some time pending a rise in price. It is unfortunate that this condition prevails. Such eggs have an adverse effect on consupmtion and no one actually benefitted thereby.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10. — Government crop reports, actual and prospective, smashed prices down today for future deliveries of wheat. However, lively demand from millers gave a lift to quotations on wheat available for immediate use. After tumbling as much as 5⅛ cents a bushel in some cases, the wheat market closed nervous with future deliveries 4 cents to 4⅞ cents net lower, December $1.49⅛ to $1.49¾ and May $1.52¾ to $1.52⅞. Corn finished at 1⅜ to 2 cents down, oats ⅞ to 1 cent to 1⅛ cents at 1¾ cents off, and provisions varying from 22 cents decline to a rise of 15 cents.

Shock from the United States government crop report forecasting a much larger yield of spring wheat than had been lookd for month ago was added to by predictions which were current and which later proved to be correct that the Canadian Government report would also point to a probable increase as compared with the outlook last month. The consequent sharpest setback in price was for May delivery of wheat. The price of May dropped at one time to $1.52 1-2, as against $1.57⅛ to $1.57 5-8, the closing figures of the day to $1.48⅞, shattering a widely held belief that no sales below $1.50 would again be witnessed this season.

TERROR REIGNS IN TONG CLASH

Two More Orientals Meet Death in New York—Dread "Fourteen" Blamed.

RAID BY POLICE

NEW YORK, Sept. 11. — The dread "fourteen" came back to Chinatown Wednesday night, pistols spat fire through the maculate streets, a hatchet descended upon an Oriental skull, and two more tongmen died.

New York's police, at the end of their patience, swept down on the fear-torn district, and, for the first time, arrested three tong leaders, holding them directly responsible for the outbreaks.

Hoy Quae was wounded twice in the head and once in the back, and died shortly after reaching a hospital. Wong Hong was found at midnight, his head crushed in by blows from a hatchet. He lay in a long, dark hallway on the top floor of a rooming house. Both victims were Hip Sing tong members.

Gee Lee Minn, international president of the On Leong tong; Henry Moy, international secretary, and Lee Du, local secretary, were the leaders arrested.

Gunmen's Band.

Chinatown watched with a grim smile the police take the tong chiefs. It was whispered neither tong was responsible for the two slayings. Rather, the "fourteen," noted band of Oriental gunmen, now reduced to 13 members because Chin Jack Len, their leader, is in prison, was blamed.

And while the usual course of tong warfare sees Mott, Doyers and Pell streets at ease, the presence of the "fourteen" finds them deserted, their residents padding on slippered feet into the shelter of the rookeries which line the sidewalks.

The band, years ago, were members of the On Leong tong. Chin Jack Lem was a powerful influence in the oranization.

A revolt within the tong occurred and Chin and 13 followers withdrew. A short while later word came from Cleveland that the Hip Sings had violated the tong code and admitted the "fourteen" to membership.

Cause of War.

Tong warfare of last spring was traceable to Hip Sing refusal of the On Leong demand to expel the fourteen.

Similar trouble developed in Cleveland and the gang once more withdrew, this time with the announced intention of fighting tongmen of both orders. Chin was committed to prison for 20 years, following conviction on an extortion charge.

Now the "fourteen," so Chinatown declares, is back in New York and the lantern-slung section trembles with the knowledge.

NO BOLSHEVISM IN QUEBEC SAYS NEWSPAPER MAN

HAPPY PROVINCE

Priests Propagate Good-will Between Employers and Their Employees.

SYDNEY, Australia, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press Cable via Reuter's) — John Bessett, of the Montreal 'Gazette,' one of the Canadian delegates to the Imperial Press Conference at Melbourne, Thursday paid a striking tribute to the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec.

"Quebec is one of the greatest bulwarks against Bolshevism within the British Empire, due to the wonderful influence of the priests who have created, by good counsel, a remarkable spirit of common-sense between employers and employees," he said.

Although he was himself a non-Catholic, Mr. Bassett praised the tolerant attitude of the Catholic majority of the Quebec Province. "The French-Canadian province of Quebec is one of the happiest and most progressive of the Dominion," he declared, "and although the Roman Catholics are in an overwrhelming majority there is no bigotry or interference with the religious liberty of the minority."

Mr. Bassett also had praise for the economic contentment and prosperity of Quebec which, he said, was due to the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in deprecating extremes and in standing for moderation and common-sense in industrial and commercial matters. Quebec, he added, allowed no intrusion of any foreign or dangerous elements into its industrial fabric.

LIMEHOUSE DWELLINGS NOT UNHEALTHY INDIGNANT LONDON TENANTS MAINTAIN

Stepney Borough Council's Scheme to Destroy Them as Unsanitary Meets With Renewed Opposition—Infantile Death Rate is 161 Per 1000.

LONDON, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press Cable). — Tenants of Limehouse dwellings which the Stepney Borough Council is seeking to have destroyed as being an insanitary area again crowded the Town Hall Thursday when the Ministry of Health Inspector resumed his enquiry into the condition of the houses after personally visiting the district. Owners of the houses and real estate agents testified in opposition to the Council's scheme. One who is an occupier as well as owner of one of the Limehouse dwellings, said he had conducted a fish-curing business in his premises for the past forty-four years and had spent £700 on improvements in the last eighteen months.

To a real estate agent who stated the opinion that there was nothing dangerous to health in the area, the Town Clerk said:

"Do you call an infantile death-rate of 161 per thousand in this area compared with 74 per thousand for the whole of the Borough of Stepney evidence of a healthy area?"

The witness replied that he regretted he was unable to express an opinion on medical statistics, and said there must be reasons other than the houses.

After a number of owners and tenants had testified and described the houses as sound, habitable and healthy, a house agent of Stepney evoked cheers from a part of the public when he declared that the Borough Council was responsible for overcrowding in the dwellings and asserted that statistics affecting respiratory diseases in the insanitary are, had shown an improvement in the last four years, while the statistics for the whole borough showed that these diseases were on the increase. After a sharp passage with the Town Clerk the witness asserted that every house in the condemned area was fit for human habitation, and told the Ministry of Health Inspector: "I don't romance. I am not the Town Clerk." The enquiry was adjourned.

SEAMEN LOSING IN MANY PORTS

Several Hundred in Prison for Various Breaches of Duty.

SHIPS SAILING

LONDON, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press).—Despatches from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa on Thursday all indicate that the unofficial strike of British seamen, which has been most serious in the ports of these dominions, is breaking down owing to the drastic measures adopted by the authorities.

Altogether, about two hundred strikers have been sentenced to short prison terms of less than a month and the forfeiture of several days' pay under various charges of breach of duty.

At Melbourne, police yesterday surrounded the Town Hall during a meeting of the strikers and arrested the chairman and the strike committee. A number of seamen gathered outside the Melbourne office of the Orient Line seeking to be reemployed.

At Cape Town, several more strikers were summoned yesterday for refusing to fulfill their duties. There are still cases of the crews of ships newly arrived in South African ports joining the strike, but generally the ships are finding less difficulty in securing crews and in being able to sail in spite of the strike.

NATIONS TO STUDY POTENTIAL CAUSES OF TROUBLE IN EUROPE

International Economic Conference Projected by League of Nations at Suggestion of French Delegate—Compulsory Arbitration of Disputes Advocated.

NO MODIFICATION OF PROTOCOL

GENEVA, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press).—A project to convoke a big international economic conference to study the causes of economic uneasiness throughout Europe was set in motion last night by the French delegation to the League of Nations Assembly.

Louis Loucheur, speaking for the French delegation, recommended that the League's technical organizations, together with the International Labor Bureau, be asked to draw up a programme for such a conference which would include such subjects as the distribution of raw material, race questions and tariff laws, which now threaten economic chaos and possibly contain the seeds of new wars.

With the probability growing that the Geneva peace protocol will be referred to next year's Assembly without attempts at modification, Scandinavia yesterday, through Osten Unden, the Swedish Foreign Minister, initiated a move to get something tangible done meanwhile on the subject of compulsory arbitration.

Minister Unuen introduced a resolution in the Assembly yesterday, asking the Council of the League to appoint a commission of experts to study the arbitration clauses of the Geneva protocol, and he explained last night to the press correspondents that he seeks the elaboration of a collective international convention by which all countries would commit themselves to the arbitration of all conflicts.

He said that the proposed convention would be a sort of corollary to the compulsory arbitration statue of the World Court of Justice, which refers to juridical disputes.

BRITISH LABOR SNUBBING COOK

HEAD "SWELLED"

LONDON, Sept. 11.— The setback to "Emperor" Cook's ambition has been the feature of the trades union conference so far. Every major or important issue which he has advocated has been defeated, with the sole exception of a motion declaring that the object of the labor movement is the overthrow of capitalism, which the congress passed more as a sop to his vanity and from a sense of tiredness of the subject than anything else. There have been pointed references to Cook being swelled-headed by a number of delegates, notably Ben Tillet and other moderate leaders, who have all taken advantage of the congress to curb the rising power of Cook and impress upon him that he is not the sole leader of the movement.

What Cook's ultimate response will be is unknown, but undoubtedly he and his colleagues will strive with greater efforts to undermine the unions from within, with the view of overthrowing leaders like J. H. Thomas and J. R. Clynes, who are not radical enough to suit the miners' chief.

Time of the Test.

When, in nine months, the present coal truce comes to an end, then will be the testing time for both Cook and the others. At that time it will be revealed more clearly what is the future of the trade union movement, whether the big union idea is going to triumph or the present system of independent unions loosely allied, but retaining their independence, is going to continue.

During all the variations in the calendar, September has always had 30 days.

SYNOPSIS

Bob Wilson, a young tramp, has reached Crater City from Granite Gorge, where he prevented the wreck of the Limited on a trestle after a landslide. He now accompanies Jim Fowler, the mail clerk, to the latter's home. Fowler is happy and excited, for he expects to find that he has become a father. A babe is placed in his arms as he enters, but his happiness changes to sorrow when he learns that the youngster has come into the world at the cost of his mother's life.

From that stuffy parlor into the unsheltered outer night was only a step, but it carried Bob into a different world. He was glad to get out, though, and to offer his bare head and naked cheeks to the cleansing vigor of the elements. Out here, somehow, the tragedy did not seem so concentrated and poignant; and there were no walls to reflect the sounds and the sights of grief.

Bob came to a pause on the blobby patch of wet grass that was, in more seemly times, a front lawn. It was difficult to discern anything through the veil of rain, but finally he made out Jim a few rods away and hurried after him.

In his intense personalization of the situation it never occured to him that the sound of footsteps could not be heard above the storm; so, involunatrily, he trod on tiptoe. It was an unnecessary nicety, though; it would have been unnecessary even though they walked with iron shod shoes in marble tombs, for Jim Fowler was dead to the sounds of reality, of the storm and the world. He plodded stiffly, chin in, shoulders square and arms by his sides as a corpse might walk—with jerking, cataleptic steps.

Bob clutched up his threadbare coat close to his throat as he followed, for the rain slapping into his face and dribbling down inside his clothes chilled him through and through. He was bareheaded; he had left his cap where he had dropped it—on a chair in the Fowler parlor.

Bob glanced back once in the direction of the little cottage. The only sign of its existence was a pale yellow spot of light glimmering through the cascading windowpane. That bit of light meant interior comfort and warmth, and the hobo choked with selfish resentfulness at the spiteful fate that did not stop at wrecking a strange home in order to make him uncomfortable. At least, so it seemed to him, for he had acquired a personal injury complex. Life was always closing doors in his face.

What silly trick of Fate was it that had turned him, outcast and pariah, to participation in an affair of human experience that was none of his business? What mechanism of social intercourse was it that kept his feet plodding after a stranger he had not known by sight or word until a brief hour before? Bob stopped in his tracks. It struck him as sheer nonsense that he should be following this man, like a derelict guardian angel.

The hobo philosophy of Potts and of Spike and their kind occurred to him: "What the hell difference does anything make?" What difference, indeed? The thing he wanted most now was an obscure but sheltered nook n the freight yards; a barrel or a shanty, preferably near the vicarious heat of the locomotives' dumping pit, safe from trainmen's sticks and boots.

Bob, with a shrug, turned and set his face to retrace his steps toward the widespread diffusion of light against the night sky on lower land to the east that marked the Crater City railroad yards. There was the pale of him and his social kind on nights like this; he had no business wandering from it.

Now with his mind made up and his steps already retracing their way, Bob glanced back with uneasy curiosity after the man who had tried to befriend him. But he experienced no sense of gratitude; only dogs felt gratitude.

Jim seemed to be moving along a sort of ridge some distance above Bob, and the steady play of lightning against the unobstructed sky beyond the ridgeline served to keep his stiffly moving figure in almost constant silhouette. As Bob watched he saw Jim in his trance walk starkly into a tree, stagger back, and fall heavily.

"The poor devil," he muttered, "he hasn't any idea of what he's doing or where he's going. I've got to watch him or he will be killed!"

Involuntarily Bob changed his irresolute course once more and hurried along at a penitent dogtrot to regain the ground he had lost, to pick Jim up. Before Bob could reach him, however, Jim arose and resumed his Golgothic way. Bob fell into step behind him, as before, and admitted to himself with the usual sheepish confusion of an inconsistent cynic that it was not doglike gratitude, but rather a genuine personal interest and liking that made him "his brother's keeper."

Their way lead sharply upwards now, along the seam of the ridge; and Bob, winded and laboring with wearied legs and feet, marvelled at the inward powers of emotional strength that were keeping the slender young mail clerk forging ahead with no visible slackening of pace or poise. Bob began to fear for Jim mightily; this strained restriction of a flood of grief behind a dam of dazed mentality was bound to result in a fearful cracking of body and soul and mind that might sweep him to death, or worse—insanity.

Bob was unfamiliar with the topography of the local countryside, but its general conformation here led him to suspect a cliff, after the characteristics of the surrounding territory with which he had become familiar in his short life as a tramp. So he moved up to within arm's length of Jim, and strove to pierce the stormy gloom ahead for signs of a drop. It came with a suddenness that nearly fooled him despite his alertness; a gash of deeper blackness in the night underfoot. Bob cried out and plucked Jim back from the edge.

Still Jim was not consciously aware of Bob's presence. He glanced with startled yet unseeing eyes toward him, then unwittingly obeyed the new course, away from immediate danger, into which Bob gently turned him.

Thus, through the night these two men wandered through the barren and storm whipped fields on the shoulders of the supine hills that stretched back of Crater City; Bob following without question the uncanny will of the other except at times when it was necessary to guide him out of danger. And while he climbed and descended, trod and stumbled, on his weary way Bob felt a glow of spiritual exaltation displacing the chill in his veins and confounding the weariness in his body.

Bob was not of a religious turn of mind, but he had been grounded in Biblical fundamentals, and now when the service of human brotherhood was lifting him beyond himself he thrilled to a resemblance of this bereaved lover, walking his life away for his solitary love, to that Young Man who had endured a Passion and Death for all.

These desolate hills of ancient lava were truly Jim Fowler's Gethsemane; his misery was, in fundamentals if not in details, a replica of that Storied Agony. Like the Apostles of old, Bob had come to watch; but unlike them, he did not go to sleep. In him was born, as the night wore on and the physical pain of watching and following became so acute that he cold scarcely move as realization of the true significance of that Ancient Sacrifice.

The bird sanctuaries in the royal parks of London owe their existence to the war, for when the gardeners were at the front, brambles grew up in certain corners, forming a nesting place for many kinds of birds that formerly did not stop there.

MEIGHEN LAUDS BETHANY WORKERS

about taxation had ignored the second account which was as much the country's as was the first. Compare the debts on the railway today with those of 1922.

The Premier's method of covering the loss on the National Railways was by endorsing the railway's notes. The debts of the railways were Canada's — the railways were Canada's. They had supplied to the National Railways 100 million dollars a year for three years. The first year 1922 was not discouraging. That year they advanced 59 millions. An immense sum? Yes. But it did not represent an increase in debt. There was a reason for that. The railways were overloaded with lines that should never have been built. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was built 20 years ago against the advice of Sir Robert Borden. The result was that one railway crashed after another. The people of the country were the mortgagees and had to take the bonds. The bonds were theirs. The railway's debts were the people's debts. Until 1922 the Conservative Government had to put the railways into shape for operation. Sir Henry Thornton on inspecting the railways in that year said the money had been well spent and the railroad was in good condition.

The Railway Board

In 1923 the old Railway Board, composed of men who were not politicians, who had never held any public offices, highly competent financiers, was abolished and a new Board set up which looked like a Liberal campaign committee. On it were placed men like Mr. Hanna. On the board was appointed a man who had led the Liberals in parliament and who had really never led anything except perhaps the singing. Another was a man who was too old to be sent to the Senate and had been put on the directorate of the greatest railway in the world—at 75 years of age he was commencing to learn railroad management. The result was a big deficit each year. Mr. King had said "Wait till the end of this year." An increased revenue was expected from the freightage of this year's crop. At the end of this year, they would find that the contraction in business elsewhere would more than offset the increased business from the crop.

Under these men 234 millions had been added to the debt. These debts were paid by the people. They were paying interest every day on these debts. Could they imagine that sum. It represented three-fourths of the country's entire debt before the war. And this was added in two years. Yet Mr. King claimed he had reduced taxation. And Mr. Meighen should not be so hard on him.

Mr. King had reduced taxes. He had reduced some that he had put on himself and had increased the rest. The sales tax was a case in point. When the present administration came into power, they found a tax, a war time measure, of 3 per cent. on some manufactured goods, and of 4 per cent on foreign goods. In their first year they increased this tax. In the following year it was raised until the sales tax stood at 6 per cent all round. Now Mr. King had reduced it to 5 per cent. and was howling about his reductions. Mr. Meighen said his vocabulary was limited to describe such tactics. The King Government had also lowered customs and by lowering them had made it impossible for many of the people to pay for anything at all. These were the achievements of the Government. Let them now examine the Government's excuses.

What the Government Says

There were great problems to be faced said the Government—Transportation, the Senate ("There is a problem for you," said Mr. Meighen smiling broadly.) These problems were pressing hard on the country and the Government pleaded they were unable to attack the difficulties because of an insufficient majority. For the first time in four years the premier admitted he had not a majority. He used to boast of his large majority. The Opposition was nothing. Now he was complaining that he had no majority at all. It was composed of Progressives who, said Mr. King, could not help in the solution of the problems of Transportation, Immigration and the Senate.

Union With Progressives

Four years ago Mr. King told the people that the Progressives and the Liberals were the same. So they were, for the Liberals copied the Progressives word for word. Their policies were identical. Then, why not apply them? Mr. King had stood where the Progressives stood and courted an alliance with them. Now, he says, he can't work with them. But at the present moment Liberal candidates in the West were being withdrawn where Progressives were considered likely to be successful. Imagine a man complaining of what he himself had brought about. Mr. King's present position was the result of his dishonest tactics while in opposition.

A young man killed his parents and was brought before the judge who found him "guilty." Before passing sentence the judge asked the murderer if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced against him. Thereupon the man who had slain his parents got up and asked for mercy on the ground that he was an orphan. (Laughter and applause). That illustrated Mr. King's first excuse.

The second excuse was that the Government could not operate because of the Opposition. Mr. King said, "Just when we go to make a beneficial law Mr. Meighen slips right in our way. Give me a majority to sweep away those who thwart me." The Premier sat still and did nothing but complain of difficulties. The chief indictment against them was futility and lack of endeavor. Not always had they done nothing.

What the Government Did

They established a Wheat Board for the West on a promise made by the Minister of Agriculture. They did not give what they promised. They knew they could not. They put through a bill that was never operated. It lay still on the Statute Book, a gold brick, a monument to a farcical administration.

Then they put through a bill against combines—against combines on the lakes and against combines in the textile industry. Sir Charles Gordon was described by a member of the Government as an enemy of the country and a man who should be put in jail. Mr. Meighen said he did not believe that but the same government sent Sir Charles Gordon to Geneva as representative of the country.

Then they were going to stop bank mergers. Yet there had been five or six during the lifetime of the government.

Combines on the Lakes

When the government resolved to break the rates of the steamers on the lakes true to form they engaged W. R. Preston. W. R. Preston could always get a job at Ottawa. Every hour he was in a job and drawing a salary. A bill was drawn up and passed which compelled all grain shippers on the lakes to file a charter at Fort William and all charges were subject to reduction if the commission thought fit. This sounded all right. But the fact was that half of the ships were American owned. The government was warned of this and it was pointed out that the legislation would be useless. Oh! the Liberals knew. What they did not know the Progressives knew and the act was put into effect in the fall of 1923. The American ships were put on to the carrying of iron for Minnesota and in transporting American grain. Rates went up to the highest point known in Canadian history. The extra was absorbed by the people whom the bill was brought in to check. The shippers were bound to get the grain no matter who got it. Then the government went down at the feet of the American ship owners and entered into an agreement to indemnify them against a law made in Canada by the Canadian Government, guaranteeing them against a breach of the law. No deeper or more stringent humiliation could be imagined. The rates came down and the old system was restored. Wasn't it too bad that anyone stood in the way of this government.

Not content with trying to curb combines on the lakes they attempted the same thing on the ocean. They had failed on the lakes. The Progressives helped that bill through, but when the question of Atlantic shipping came up even they hesitated. I need hardly tell you W. R. Preston as usual was on the job. He was sent off to see shippers and make a report. He did look around, and brought back a report. Later, he admitted he saw only one company. A bill was brought in to ratify a contract signed and sealed, as all Governments have to do. Mr. King took great credit for this. He was fond of saying the contract was brought before the House to be ratified by the people's representatives. But he could not help doing that. No government could avoid that. What was the contract? Before he told them he wanted to say that he had too much respect for the intelligence of some of the government to believe they saw. He knew that from what they said in private outside official debates, he had never heard a man who did not denounce the contract as being manifestly stupid.

The Petersen Contract.

The contract was with Sir William Petersen in England, a man who had some experience in shipping, although not a great deal. He was to build 10 ships by means of which the Government hoped to break the monopoly on the Atlantic. These ships were not very big; Canada has 12 bigger ships belonging to herself, and had 3 dozen almost as good. Under the terms of the contract Petersen was to get $13,300,000 spread over three years—more than would build the 10 ships three times over and three others besides. And the ships were to be Petersen's property. Canada was to pay twice for what Petersen was to own and yet Canada had at that time better ships without a cent against them. These vessels would not have carried one bushel in 25 of the grain crossing the Atlantic. In a word no one could have broken a monopoly with these 10 ships any more than a man could ladle the Atlantic with a dipper. Mr. King said: "There are combines and I am Sir Galahad and I love to fight them." The speaker had no doubt there was a combine. It was called a conference. Shipowners claimed, with a show of reason, he thought, that the running of steamers over a long distance at regular intervals could only be done by a shipping conference. All I know is it is never done any other way on any other ocean. The government could not do it. They had 53 ships which were in the conference and whose rates were fixed by the conference. Even at that they were losing money every year. The Conservative Government was abused for building the ships in the first place. The Liberal party said they should not have built them. Then, why build 10 more. Why then put 13 million in a futile contract which government members of the House called a perfect exhibition of delirium tremens. Mr. King said the contract was broken because of the death of Sir William Petersen. But Sir William Petersen himself had stated before the committee that all arrangements had been completed whether he lived or died. The bill was finally handed over to a committee composed of Liberals, Conservatives and Progressives, who gave it a decent burial. Too bad! To thwart Premier King and save 13 milions after such an exhibition of grotesque folly. Not a single Progressive defended the measure, one newspaper in the whole Dominion endorsed it and he did not think even that paper would support it now.

Immigration Policy

As to immigration, here again the complaint was that the Government had no majority. The real trouble was they had no policy on this question. They had only policies that poured money like water on the railroads, on skyscrapers in Toronto, high class hotels and golf courses and if any money was left they spent it on building a wharf for the smuggling of whiskey into the United States. If this government were put out that drain of money would be stopped and the new governmen would take the responsibility.

He had looked up the other day and found that Premier King had announced 14 policies or rather enunciated the same policy in 14 different times and ways. It amounted to this—get all the desirable immigrants we can. In 1921 148,000 immigrants entered Canada, no stupendous number. Before the war, the figures were 400,000 per annum. In the last year, ending March 31, 111,000 were brought in and $3,800,000 were spent to get them. This was not the worst. The New York World sent an investigator to find out what became of those who came in. He had seen the investigator's report. It seemed very thorough. Half of those immigrants were in the United States at the present time. On Tuesday of this week he recived the figures for the first three months of the present fiscal year. There were 27,000 less immigrants than in the same period last year. At this rate the present would be the poorest immigration year they had yet had. The King government had never been denied a dollar for immigration. The Premier affected to believe that the leader of the Opposition was the cause of this decline. He appeared to believe that the Conservative leader could influence prosperous people to resign their jobs and go away to the States, and that across the Atlantic masses were swayed by his words to the extent of nullifying the herculean efforts of the Government to induce them to come to this side. Such ineffable nonsense, declared Mr. Meighen scornfully. A huge percentage of those who come here never heard my name. Not one who left here did so because of what I said. They had no job and they had to go. (Cheers).

Exodus to the States

Evidence from all sources showed that 400,000 had left for the United States. Those responsible for the condition should be blamed, not those who drew attention to them. The secretary of the Great War Veterans Association, who was in all probability a good Canadian, stated that one-third of those who had fought overseas had left this country. What was the reason. Some of the cities had become larger, but none had equalled the growth of those competing cities across the border. They were losing population.

Premier King had spoken of U. S. competition. There was no such thing as U. S. competition in immigration. Their only immigration policy was their tariff. U. S. does not spend a great deal of money, but it was for the purpose of keeping out immigrants, while Canada was spending to get a trickling stream, half of which oozed across the line. There was no need to despair. No nation could stand bad government as Canada could. What caused these conditions? What caused the exodus from their shores? They could not blame Providence. The only thing that was right was something with which the Government had nothing to do. There never had been four harvests like those of the past four years. He was born and raised on a farm and had observed these things. The crops produced during these four years had been bigger than ever. With such crops one would have expected prosperity, good business, busy factories.

Question of Tariffs

Four years ago the Conservative party took up the challenge thrown down by the Liberals and Progressives. The Liberals and Progressives said they would take the tariff off seventeen classes of goods. The Conservatives made an appeal advocating a moderate tariff and made every endeavor to keep the minds of the electors on what they would be called upon to decide. In every province save three the issue was side tracked. In the Maritime Provinces the Government through Messrs. MacDonald and Logan, said the trouble lay in the Intercolonial Railway being merged with the C. N.R. and promised to give it back. King candidates in Quebec called themselves Protectionists In Quebec, they also spoke of Mr. Meighen as the author of the Military Service Act, the man who sent their sons away. They pictured him as a man with blood on his hands. That was how they fought the tariff in Quebec and got 65 returned which placed them in power In British Corumbia, where the farmer would never till the soil if there were no tariff, they issued pamphlets—he had some in his possession— in which the Liberals said they would grant a tariff and denounced him for not going far enough. In the Prairie provinces and in some rural Ontario ridings where Progressive sentiment was strong, the Liberals were all the same, and there and there alone did they talk tariff.

Said Industries Destroyed

Once in power, the government did what it had been predicted they would do. They ran away from their programme. They nibbled here and there, they threatened more, with the result that capital became nervous. Though they took but few steps—only in one case out of the 17 did they take off the tariff—in every case calamity was caused and remained. Mr. King took the tariff from fertilizers. When he came to Bethany he would boast of that. The tariff, he said, raised the price . In 1882 when a tariff was introduced, the prices of all utensils were actually lowered by competition which was carried on by Canadian manufacturers. The whole field of purchase prices was lower than in 1878 except in two articles —horse shoes and soap.

The policy to be adopted should be that which would bring most scope for the talents within the country. Fertilizer plants went bankrupt in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. After Canadian plants were out of the road America raised her prices. The Government could not help. They had no control over America. Would they like to be in the grip of America for everything as they were in the case of fertilizer. When the duties were taken off agricultural implements, were prices lowered? He had the official lists of prices. In nine cases out of ten prices were higher. Taking tariffs off had reduced steel production in Canada by 60 per cent while America's production was one and a half times that of former years. Of textile goods $125,000,000 came into Canada. They could keep $100,000,000 of that in the country, giving employment for 25,000 men. The same was true in other cases, but he wished to deal with the question as it affected the farmer.

Not For Big Interests

The people had been told by the Progressives that the tariff was for the big interests. If this was true, the man who advocated the policy would be a traitor to his country. No country believed that America did not believe that and her people were pretty wise, and she was the richest country in the world. He had been speaking to a lumber man —a man from Brantford—who told him the lumber company was employi ; only half its men this year. Why? Because factories that formerly took millions of feet of lumber were closed. This same man told of 200 miles of timber limits of good trees that were being turned into pulpwood, because there was no other demand for timber.

A textile manufacturer told of approaching the government asking for some sort of guarantee of protection and stability in tariff. No such guarantee was forthcoming so the man simply bought machines from Germany, established a factory in Philadelphia where he was operating full time while the factory in Canada was working three days a week. Work and wages, hundreds of millions of dollars lost to Canada in this way! The manufacturer did not suffer. He simply removed his plant elsewhere. It was the worker who suffered in the closing of the factory that meant work and wages for him.

Farm Products

The Government contended that protection was of no use to the agriculturist. Would the agriculturist not be better off if towns like Bownmanville and Port Hope were doubled in size. Double the population of the country and the value of the farms would immediately be multiplied by two. Farmers sending produce into the United States had now to get over the highest tariff wall that had ever been erected against them. At the same time the tariff of this country was lowered. The American farmer was enabled to bring his stuff into Canada just at the time when the Canadian farmer wanted a good market for his products.

Treaties had been negotiated with France and Australia. In the French treaty no mention was made of the farmer. What Canada got from France was higher prices against the farmer. Condensed milk, large quantities of which were exported from Canada, had a 50 per cent raise in tariff which had destroyed the export trade to France. As to the Australian treaty, some of the clauses were harmful, others might be good, but in it was nothing good for the farmer and much that was detrimental. British paper had hitherto got into Australia on easier terms than Canadian. So had British canned salmon and some parts of automobiles. It was worth while getting these things made right. But everything that had been gained from Australia had been at the expense of the farmer. Canada had a duty of 3 or 4 cents on butter and eggs and a duty of 2c on meat. In all these commodities Australia was a large exporter. Mr. Robb had said very little meat came to Canada from Australia. Yes, but this was because it was confronted by a good tariff. The new treaty purposed to reduce the tariff to 1-2c per lb. With an ocean rate from Sydney to Vancouver less than railway freight charges from Vancouver to Calgary, Australian meat aided by the very low tariff was going to be a serious competitor with the Canadian farmer in the Canadian market.

Reductions were to be effected in the tariff on butter and eggs were to be allowed in free. So was cheese and Australia was a large producer of cheese.

Constructive Proposals.

Mr. King had said the Opposition never advanced any constructive proposal. Here was one. In dealing with France raise all tariffs on farm produce. Then the countries would have something to bargain with. In the case of Australia they could raise the tariff on farm goods to say 8 cents. Then they could say to Australia, "Let in our paper and other things and we will reduce our tariff by half." Both Progressives and Liberals voted to let the farmer be swamped by products from these two countries.

If returned to power the Conservative party would raise the Canadian tariff to the level of the American. Let Canada fight with the weapons of other countries. Then exiles would return, immigrants would come and development would exceed that of late years.

Welcomed Leader

County Reeve L. H. Staples assured Mr. Meighen of the welcome which the electors of East Durham extended. He said it was the first time that a meeting of that kind had ever been held in the vicinity and it would certainly prove fruitful. He predicted that the riding would prove as faithful in the present cause as it was under the leadership of Sir John A. MacDonald.

Joseph Thompson

"The thing which makes the greatest appeal to me is the exodus of the best of our youth to the States," declared Captain J. Thompson during his address in support of the Meighen platform. There are some circumstances under which such an exodus would be entirely desirable. If those who were leaving Canada were the dregs of civilization their departure would occasion feelings of relief and gratitude but that is not the case now when the best of the country's youth is quitting the country to find lucrative employment where they may.

The city man and the country man are inter-dependent as the products of the one place find consumers in the other. Those who are unwilling to acknowledge this relationship are leaving the country.

Canada is laboring under a great financial onus because it is spending millions to train its youth for United States positions. "We have become a training school for our neighbors and our tax bills show the cost of this unprofitable education."

Work is the remedy; we must give employment to the young folk who leave Canada not because they like the States but because lack of opportunity drives them to seek more profitable fields.

We must open up our factories and offer once again the inducements which will retain the commodity which is of the greatest value to this land — our own Canadian youth. In order to do this we must have a league of provinces. It is a fact that the provinces of Canada are not as friendly now as they used to be; they must join hand in hand if progress is to be made in the salvation of young Canadians to further the growth of home industry and development."

"There is one point," continued Mr. Thompson, "by which the Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen has always appealed and that is his consistency in maintaining the same policy for all the provinces. At this present time we need a national policy of co-operative union in which each province of Canada takes a concerted and unanimous stand."

Fred W. Bowen

That Canada should be for Canadians was the assertion made by Mr. Bowen, member of the Dominion house for Durham. This had always been Mr. Meighen's ideal and it was the view held widely by all Conservative members.

"We were only fifty strong but we were not divided." declared Mr. Bowen. When the premier declared recently that he had been hampered by the opposition it was merely a concession to their curbing influence.

In one year 40 millions of dollars was paid out to import woollen and knitted goods while Canadian factories in many instances were running on part time. Had certain adjustments been made in the tariff, employment would certainly have been given to many people — one hundred thousand was a conservative estimate.

Mr. Bowen noted that manufacturers took up a major amount of space at the Canadian National Exhibition. When it is considered that Canada is primarily an agricultural country this fact is worthy of note.

As agriculture and manufacturing are directly linked they must have a policy which will further this desirable relationship. Canada has been operated under group governments which do not tend to further the co-operative spirit which should exist between producer and consumer.

Ontario and Quebec must be prosperous and in order to attain prosperity a certain degree of economy should be exercised. The King government was extravagant, charged Mr. Bowen.

Everyone likes to see the country prosperous and they dislike evidences of reckless and inconsiderable extravagance. Mr. Bowen quoted instances wherein were depicted what he considered several cases illustrative of his statement. The money spent for golf links at Jasper Park as well as new hotels and railway conveniences did not, he thought, bring in returns commensurate with the expenditure.

The Conservatives do not picture ruin ahead but neither do they minimize the great work which must be done when they return to power. (Applause).

Mrs. H. T. Fallis

Days spent as a teacher in the old red school house on the hill overlooking the village were recalled by Mrs. Fallis. Many of those whom she taught were, she believed, in the audience before her. The difference in those days and the present time was jocularly treated when Mrs. Fallis reminded her hearers that women were linked with idiots and insane as regards ability to vote. Those old restrictions were removed and the speaker made no apologies for her presence on the platform with Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen.

The support of Canadian women was assured to Mr. Meighen who Mrs. Fallis described as the "brightest star in the political firmament and Canada's next premier." (Applause).

"Mr. King's tariff policy is uncertain," declared the speaker, "and depends on the place where he happens to be delivering his address."

The Liberals obtained a solid bloc of sixty-five in Quebec and this was how it happened:

Mr. Meighen was the father of the Military Service Act and he was pictured as one who would rob the homes of their sons and sacrifice them in war. That, Mrs. Fallis averred, was the reason of that mass return of 65 seats from Quebec ridings.

The war record of Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen was compared with that of Mr. King who, the speaker declared, retreated to the United States for the four years' duration of the war reposing in peace protected by the enveloping wings of the American eagle.

The Conservative party is the friend of the farmer and laws recorded in history show the benefits which agriculturists have derived directly from Conservative administration.

Premier King urged low prices but low prices mean low wages. Good wages are essential for prosperity. Asiatic countries were compared where prices might possibly suit even the King Government. What were the conditions in those places? Mrs. Fallis wanted to know. What difference did it make about low prices when there was no work and consequently no money to buy at any price.

Women are quite apt to consider that the tariff question does not affect them but when they reflect that tariff rates have a direct influence on the state of the pocket book it is then their duty to become acquainted with this angle of the situation.

"In the coming contest," Mrs. Fallis concluded, "there is just one thing to remember: 'Has the King government been of value'?" She then issued a call on the women to line up behind the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, whose thought is for Canadians and who, himself, is one hundred per cent. Canadian. (Applause).

R. J. Manion

"Mr. King accused me of being one of the deserting Liberals," stated Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion of Fort William, "but," he continued, "there will be many more deserting Liberals before this campaign is over and the remnants of the King supporters will resemble Kerensky's army at the conclusion of the Russian Revolution.

"King has not proved true to his promises made while in opposition. He broke every one of them. He promised that the cost of living would go down. The reverse of this has happened and living costs are higher than ever. He promised soldiers better consideration and also Senate reform. Thousands of Orders in Council had been passed and more royal commissions had been granted than during the last four years."

"In the last ten years,' interpolated Mr. Meighen at this point.

"I wanted to be very conservative," explained Mr. Manion, "because a deserting Liberal must be careful of what he says." (Laughter). "I repeat," he continued, "that Mr. King promised everything to everybody and broke every promise."

High taxation was largely due to the influence of the war but it was also attributable to costly legislation. In every branch of government the King party had ignored promises of economy. While other countries, notably the United States and Great Britain, have been cutting expenses down to bare necessities the government of Canada has gone on spending money like drunken Indians. Every bit of governing had been either utterly valueless or positively harmful.

The object of free traders is to attain cheap goods but what Canadian people want is work and wages.

"Did any of the official 180,000 who vacated Canada in preference for the States leave because of the high cost of living or the high rate of taxation?" the speaker demanded. "They left because they wanted work and wages."

Last year 150 million dollars' worth of farm produce was brought into Canada from the United States exclusive of tropical fruits. This was made possible by low tariff rates which permitted such unfavorable competition and forced Canadian farmers to accept minimum prices for their produce. There is no class in the country which requires protection so much as the farmers of Ontario and Quebec in order to keep out American products and to keep industrial centres built up. Any farmer who looks at the matter rightly knows that his goods are more saleable upon a protective basis.

A conservative wave is now sweeping the country and as it constitutes the personnel of high tariff parties those parties are coming into power with the consequence that universal protection is evident in all countries excepting the Dominion of Canada whose government has countenanced the flood of foreign goods to sweep through the borders.

The people of Canada are going to punish King for his broken promises and the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen will be given the support which his cause deserves, was the opinion of the speaker. Mr. Meighen has the affection of the greater number of the commoners, including a number of Liberal members and he has the respect of the remainder. This tribute to the personality of the Conservative leader concluded Mr. Manion's address.

M. E. Maybee

"It has been said that Mr. Meighen has been too candid and considerate," declared Mr. Maybee, M. P., for the East Northumberland riding, but this is a time when candor is one of the greatest needs of the times.

At this moment, he declared, Canada was on the cross roads one of which would lead to prosperity while the other would terminate in further indebtedness.

Mr. Maybee paid a tribute to the work of Mr. Bowen, the Durham member.

George McCartney

A resolution was introduced and moved, seconded and carried that the mass meeting held on the Bethany Athletic grounds be pronounced a success and that Mr. Meighen and his party was assured of unqualified support from the district represented. Mr. McCartney hoped that soon he should be able to address Mr. Meighen as Prime Minister. Likewise he expressed unbounded confidence in the person of Premier Ferguson of the provincial legislature.

W. H. Bradburn

In the last three or four years we have lost many citizens of Peterborough through the trek to the States, said Mr. Bradburn, recounting many instances which showed clearly that in the cases he mentioned the removal of citizens from Canada was caused by lack of employment. He believed that the American country held no inducement in itself but that Canadians were merely taking advantage of the circumstances afforded for their betterment. Should employment in Canada once again reach a desirable footing there is no doubt but that many who have now left for the land to the south would return once again to the country which they regard as the homeland.

Immigration will naturally adjust itself to the increased labor field and will flow into the country.

"Two weeks from tonight," Mr. Bradburn predicted, there will be a meeting in the Peterborough constituency and at that meeting a candidate will be appointed who will defeat the present member. This will be common elsewhere and the liberal party will be in the discard.

A. J. Fallis

"This meeting has had greater significance than any other ever held in this county," was the pronouncement made by Mr. Fallis. Never had there been so much at stake as there is at the present time and at no time in previous history was the presence of a good strong leader more essential than now.

Canada as a country is packed with great resources and has more real opportunity to liquidate the debt than any other nation but the whole fabric of administration has been faulty and as a result the burden is visibly on the increase. If his farm was managed as was the Dominion Mr. Fallis stated that he would not be in possession long.

Lower taxes would mean more home comforts and better education facilities for the children but on the contrary the tax rate prevents the people from purchasing comforts and conveniences which would add to the labor supply for the country.

Mr. Fallis complimented the speakers who had preceded him because of their incisive representation of the issues which faced the electors.

Kiss And Bouquet For Hon. Arthur Meighen At Bethany

A pleasing interlude in Mr. Meighen's speech at Bethany was the presentation of a tasteful bouquet of flowers by a tiny tot, who though evidently unused to such ceremonies, carried through her part with due credit. Mr. Meighen, taken somewhat by surprise, nevertheless accepted the flowers with the grace of a courtier. After he had taken the gift he hesitated, only for a moment, and then said: "Do you want to kiss me, little girl?" He bent his head—and the young lady will boast in future years that she kissed the cheek of a man who had been Prime Minister of Canada.

MANY INTERESTED SPECTATORS AT SUPERHEAT DEMONSTRATION

Chas. Hayes, Australian, Has Apparatus to Burn Slack Coal Efficiently.

DRAWS OFF OIL

Super heat—the conversion of a low grade fuel into a fuel of high quality—making, by a simple process, the ordinary bituminous slack coal into a useable domestic fuel with a delivery of nearly as many heat units per ton as anthracite coal, and a realization at the same time, of by-products in the form of crude oils and gas that will more than cover the cost of conversion, the making, in short, of a new fuel that can be used for domestic or manufacturing purposes alike, was an inteesting demonstration given at the fire-house of the Auburn Woollen Mills, kindly loaned for the purpose, yesterday afternoon, in the presence of a number of interested citizens, including His Worship, Mayor Turner, Alderman J. O. Fife, R. H. Parsons, City Engineer, City Clerk S. R. Armstrong, J. Wells Fraser, president of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Jno. Hayes, W. Sangster, Works Engineer DeLaval Company, and R. C. Flitton, of the Wm. Hamilton Company's staff.

Ever since the war, Charles Hayes, an Australian by birth, has been working on an idea that had as its basis the conversion of the ordinary soft coal into a fuel with a high-burning quality, similar to anthracite, from which could be extracted the essential oils and gases. While the tall smoke stack of the Auburn Mills belched forth black, heavy smoke into the upper air, sending forth unchecked the merchantable oils and gases contained therein, the little demonstrator in the fire-house below worked busily at its task of converting about twenty pounds of soft coal into the light, clean, dark grey lumps with hydro-carbon structure that emerged from the demonstrator at the end of the process. Into the round furnace goes the heavy, crumbling soft coal, with its enveloping dirt, and out come nice lumps of clean, brittle fuel, tight in fibre, capable of being handled without soiling the fingers.

The little furnace is a busy centre of industry. While the coal is being converted in its interior, out of a long pipe at the side comes the mixture of oil and water, heavy black oil on its surface, that soon fills a large pail, and from the top of another pipe gushes the gas that, on being lighted, burns with a clear flame high into the air. The young man in charge quenched the flame momentarily and held an empty milk bottle over the pipe. Lighting a match, the gas within burned for several minutes, emitting a faint, not unpleasant odor, lighter in essence than the ordinary gas odor.

The Carbonizing Coal Company of Canada, with parent office in Toronto, is the name of the new concern. Messrs. W. Thompson and L. E. Todd are actively interested in securing patrongae in this territory, and L. G. Tait is the energetic demonstrator. Approaching the Mayor and City Council a short time ago, with a visit also to the Engineering society, the men in charge were asked to give a practical demonstration of their system, termed by them a low temperature carbonizing plant, with super-heated steam as the basic idea. Yesterday's demonstration was the answer and the gentlemen who viewed it appeared very much impressed with the results.

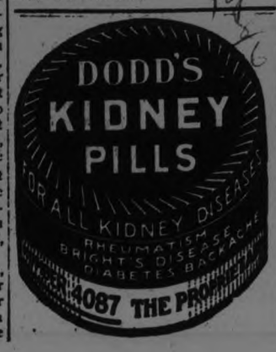
A self-contained plant, with nothing wasted, capable of producing its own motive power, it makes for economy at the very outset. After the initial impetus has been supplied, the plant realy provides for itself. Of the gas realized from the process between sixty and seventy per cent will treat the fuel, while the rest is marketable, being a gas that is claimed by the inventor to be of higher burning power than the ordinary gas, and there are several other valuable by products, including a heavy oil, tar, two lighter oils, benzoine, two sorts of dyes, wax and finally, ammonia sulphate, for use as fertilizer. It is reckoned that twenty-eight gallons of oil and tar products and eight thousand cubic feet of gas may be realized from the conversion by this process of a ton of bituminous coal.

Speed is another major item in the list of good things claimed for the invention, and a low degree of heat in its conversion. The same amount of coal that would require twenty-four hours to convert into coke can be converted into super fuel by this process in the space of one hour, and while a coking plant requires a heat of between 1600 and 2800 degrees Fahrenheit, this process needs only about 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. It has also, it is claimed, a delivery of nearly as many heat units per pound as anthracite coal, which is reckoned around 17,000 B.P.U. (British Thermal Units) while this "super fuel" delivers about 15,500. Soft coal in its ordinary state runs at about 9,000 to 14,000 heat units.

Being long burning, very easy to kindle, smokeless, odorless, sootless, clinkerless, and high in radiation, with a cherry red coloring when lighted, it is considered as an ideal fuel for ordinary domestic use, in either cooking range, grate or house furnace. Its proponents point to the time, if this fuel came into general use, when cities would not suffer smoke, odor or soot of coal, when householders could leave stove or furnace doors open without fear of dangerous gases, could have a long burning fuel without annoying clinkers, could eliminate much cleaning of pipes, and above all, could have a cheap fuel.

Soft coal, treated in this way, could easily sell at $11 a ton, or might come in time to a lower price of $9 or $10 a ton, making a very strong comparison with the price of anthracite and its many drawbacks. Lower gas also, is talked of as an advantage to be derived from this fuel.

The company is anxious to instal a plant in this locality, of which they would provide seventy-five per cent. of the cost, with a serving radius of Orillia, and Barrie, Kingston and Oshawa.



VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

A CHALLENGE.

Sir,—In your issue of September 9 I see that Campbellford has a sprinter that has broken the world's record of 9 3-5 seconds for the 100 yard dash, by doing the same in 9½ seconds.

While this time may have been given in good faith, this same sprinter's time on Labor Day last tends to contradict it, and has caused us to believe the aforesaid statement erroneous.

Possibly the timing was incorrect or the distance not up to specifications, more possibly the latter.

However, if 9½ seconds is correct with a few weeks' training, this same sprinter ought to be able to repeat the performance.

I have a sprinter whose time is nearer 11 seconds than 10 seconds and this same sprinter would like to meet the Campbellford man at the Fall Fair in a matched race over 100 yards.

Thanking you for this space in your valuable paper, I remain yours,

MISSOURI.

DARK FURS ARE MORE VALUABLE AND BEAUTIFUL

Vary in Color According to Climate and Forestration.

CANADA FUR BEST

Otter is Most Durable Skin and is Used as a Standard.

As a rule it can be taken for granted that the dark specimens of the finer furs, when in their natural state are more expensive than the lighter shades of the same furs, and of the furs that have to be dyed. Dark eastern mink costs more than light mink, dark raccoon more than light raccoon, says the Natural Resources Intelligence Service of the Department of the Interior. In the same way dark sable or dark Canadian marten costs more than the lighter skins and a coat of Natural muskrat with full furred dark skins will cost considerably more than a coat of pale skins. Dark beaver is one of the most beautiful and precious of all furs and costs more than beaver of a lighter shade.

The reason for the variations in the colors is due to the variations in the actual animals, caused no doubt by the geographical and climatic conditions of the countries or territory from which they come. As a rule the farther north we go the finer and darker the fur skins, especially in heavily timbered and forest country. It is generally conceded that the finest furs are obtained in most densely wooded districts. The color and lustre of the pelts is increased according to the degree of forestration in the locality where the animal is trapped. The reasons are shelter, shade and better food. After a fire has devastated a region, a marked decline in fur is noted.

Wearing Quality.

Fur men measure the durability of the different fur skins from a standard set by the otter skin, which is reckoned 100 per cent.; the next best wearer is the beaver, 85 per cent.; dyed seal skin, 70 per cent.; raccoon 65; Persian lamb 65; krimmer 60; marten or sable 60; nutria 50; natural muskrat 45; American opossum 37; civet cat 40; squirrel 25; ermine 25; marmot 25; broadtail 10.

The wearing quality of furs generally used for trimming varies greatly, and includes skunk, which ranks 70; baum marten 65; wolverine 70; wolf 50; stone marten 45; red fox 40; kolinsky 25; lynx 25; Jap. mink 25; Chinchilla 15; rabbit 5; hare 5.

Canadian Fur Best.

The records of the United States Biological Survey show that the best quality of fur generally is obtained in the Canadian and more northern zones. According to the Natural Resources Intelligence Service one of the finest furs known is sable. The dark, rich, soft, silver-tipped furred sables flourish to-day only in cold dry climates, far from the sea.

The finest garments are made from Eastern Canada mink, mostly Nova Scotian, which are small in size, dark rich brown in color, have a thin strong pelt and possess a wealth of silky guard hairs. Along the Pacific coast is found an inferior quality of milk. It is large in size but extremely flat and has a yellowish cast. It is of interest also to note that along the coast of Alaska is found a poor grade of mink, while the interior yields a very good quality, large and dark in color. An authority in mink has stated that there is a mink in British Columbia that is as dark as the eastern mink, and some three to five inches longer.

In the interior of Alaska there is stated to be a large mink but poorer in quality than the Eastern Canada species. These large western minks would make good crosses with the Easterns. It is suggested that the future fur farmer will cross the finest specimens of eastern and western milk and breed them up with the view of making a more valuable animal.

Varieties of Beaver.

Beavers are found in Canada and the United States. In the eastern sections they are very dark but as one goes west they are lighter in color. Labrador beavers are considered the best of the Canadian beavers in colors and quality. In Washington, Oregon and British Columbia these animals are a light brown shade. The latter as a rule run larger than any of the others. Quebec beavers are the smallest. In the southern states beaver are of poor quality. The Hudson Bay Co. group beaver skins as E. B.'s (Eskimo Bay) equivalent to Labradors. Beavers from Quebec and Eastern Ontario are the next best. Yorkfords, found in Manitoba and Western Ontario, rank third. Northwestern, like the British Columbia beavers are the palest.

LARGE ESTATE LEFT BY SIR ADAM BECK

TORONTO, Sept. 11—(Canadian Press).—The will of Sir Adam Beck will be proved shortly and the probate will show assets amounting to approximately $600,000, composed of real estate, life insurance, shares in the Beck Manufacturing Co., Ltd., London Rolling Mills Co., Ltd., sundry stocks, bonds and cash. By his will, made in July, 1925, he bequeathed legacies, the major portion of which are to his daughter, Mrs. Strathearn Hay, his brother, J. F. Beck, and his nephew, Horace Beck. Sir Adam Beck also bequeathed to the London Health Association $10,000 in trust for the support and the maintenance of the Marion Beck Nurses Home and gave smaller amounts to several London charity institutions.

RUSSIANS OFFER TO PAY FRANCE

WANT FLEET BACK.

LONDON, September 11. Canadian Press. — The Russian Government has offered to settle the Russian debt to France. The face status of the Russian debt to France as computed in Paris is about $2,250,000,000.

The Russians admit a total of only a billion dollars, claiming a large reduction on account of various claims against France. They propose to commence immediate payments of $25,000,000 a year to France, or 2½ per cent. on the debt.

The Bolshevik offer is, however, contingent upon French commercial credits of unstated amounts which Russians say must be larger than the Russian payments to France, being opened for trade with Russia.

The so-called Wrangel fleet of Russian warships, now in French hands at Bizerta, must also be handed over to the Bolsheviks.

Tiring of society, Miss Muriel Grant, a 22-year-old New York girl, has set sail for Africa on a seven months' big game shooting expedition.

TRAIN SERVICE IN ANDES SUSPENDED

Heavy Snows Interrupted Traffic—Hope to Let Prince Through.

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 11—(Canadian Press).—Heavy snows yesterday caused the suspension of the International Railway service to Chile on the Trans-Andean line. Officials said, however, it was hoped to restore traffic during the week-end, thus permitting the Prince of Wales and his party to return to Buenos Aires on Monday, as planned in the schedule of the British heir's South American tour.

ENLARGE COLLEGIATE

Brockville to Vote on $100,000 Outlay.

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press.)—The Board of Education is asking the Municipal Council to submit a by-law at the next elections providing for the issue of debentures to the amount of $100,000 to meet the cost of enlargement and improvement of the Collegiate Institute, where the enrollment is now in excess of the available accommodation.

Local booksellers have been asking prices larger than those printed upon the books for text-books circulated under the direction of the Department of Education and the Board of Education is asking the Minister if it is not possible to compel them to sell them at the printed price.

PASTOR ADDRESSED MEMBERS OF W.M.S.

Rev. A. Poulter Talked of Lives of People Who Send Out Missioiaries.

BETHANY, Sept. 11.—On Tuesday afternoon the regular monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church was held in the Sunday School room. The meeting, which was presided over by the president, Mrs. T. J. Jackson, was called to order by the use of the missionary watchword, prayer followed by Rev. R. Poulter After the reading of the minutes, roll call and business, a very interesting paper was given by Miss Sarah McMullen on "Importance of Individual Prayer Life." The watch tower was answered to by five heralds. Mr. Poulter, who was present for the first time since coming to this field, was asked by the president to address the meeting, which he did. He said that while listening to the former part of the programme the thought had come to him that a stream could not run higher than its source. He said that the missionaries often wondered if people lived the life here at home that they would wish them to live on their fields.

Mr. Poulter said: "We cannot expect other men and women to live better lives than we ourselves live and it is expected that we exhibit some of the spirit of self-sacrifice that our missionaries do who have given up home, loved ones and country, to carry the message of God's love and mercy to those who know it not." The missionaries do not find this an easy task in the present day when so many of their own countrymen trade in these countries and the foreigners to these people are practically one and the same people coming from the same Christian land, although in some cases their actions are entirely different. A great deal is depending on people in the present day, that they live their lives so perfect each day that there will be no difference in their lives and those of their missionaries."

Miss Maud Rodwell then gave a splendid reading on "The Stewardship of Life." Miss Lily Weatherult read a letter from Mrs. Lavell, Toronto, president of the board of managers. At the conclusion of the meeting the usual quarterly tea was served and a social time enjoyed, the proceeds from the tea were $14.

SOLUTION OF CROSS-WORD PUZZLE IN LAST ISSUE.

ONE MASTER ONLY.

Rev. P. Costello Urges Subjugation of All to Glory of God.

"No man can serve two masters" was the text of the sermon preached at the morning Masses at St. Peter's Cathedral on Sunday by Rev. P. Costello,

"Christ wanted to impress upon us," said the reverend speaker, "that we cannot serve Him and at the same time serve the world. Everything is created for man's use, but man is created for the service of God alone. There are many who go along making a god of the pleasures of the world and unmindful of prayer until adversity comes upon them. They who serve the things of the world shall not obtain the kingdom of God. They are given us to use in the proper way as stepping stones to eternal salvation. A man may store up a certain amount of worldly riches, but he must turn these riches to the service of God.

"A good Catholic may sometimes long for the riches of the world and yet wish to serve God as well, but he will either love the one master and hate the other, or support the one and despise the other. The motive should be always the glory of God. 'See ye first the kingdom of God and His justice, and all things else shall be added unto you.' Let our lives be practical Catholic lives. Let us make use of the things of the world to further God's honor and glory, offering all our daily works for His service, practising charity towards our neighbor, and not entering into the sins of the world, seeking for those fruits of the Spirit, joy, peace and patience, which are opposed to the fruits of the flesh."

JUDGMENT IN HAVELOCK CASE

The decision of the Havelock Court of Revision is confirmed by Judge Huycke's judgment.

The following is the text of the judgment handed down by His Honor, Judge Huycke, in the appeal of Dr. Thompson against the mode of assessment of the village of Havelock as a whole and further with regard to his own assessment in particular and that of the Drs. Holdcroft.

First, against his own assessment as being too high. Second, as against Dr. Donald Holdcroft, as being too low, and third, against Dr. J. Holdcroft as being too low.

Mr. Gordon, K.C. for appellant. Mr. Medd for the Village of Havelock and Holdcrofts, the Respondents, opposed the appeals.

These appeals were to some extent conducted along wrong lines, that is comparing these different properties with the assessment of other properties in the Village and their comparative values. Section 40 of the Assessment Act provides specifically that land must be assessed at its actual value and that buildings shall be assessed at the amount by which the value of the land is increased by the existence of the buildings thereon.

Dr. Thompson's assessment on his house is $200.00 for the land, $1900.00 for the building and $300.00 business assessment, a total of $2400.00. He complains that the assessment of the land is too high. From the evidence given, and there was a good deal of it, I conclude that the residence in question is worth the amount of the assessment in "actual value" and probably more. The assessment as to that must therefore stand.

Second, Dr. Donald Holdcroft's assessment is $100.00 for the land, $900.00 for the building, a total of $1000.00. The evidence was that it was sold some years ago at a forced sale for $950.00, though probably costing more to build originally. The weight of the evidence further shows that the actual value of the property is today about $1000.00, some putting it as high as $1200.00. The assessment of $1000.00 is I think reasonable and must be confirmed.

The third appeal is as to the residence of Dr. J. Holdcroft. His house like Dr. Thompson's, is used both as a residence and an office. The land is valued at $100.00, and the buildings at $3500.00, a total of $3600.00 assessment. In addition there is business assessment of $300.0.0 and for income $400.00.

Referring to the assessment of the residence, it is rather hard to determine its actual value. Incidentally it may be pointed out that value is the dominant factor in an assessment, and that section 69 which was referred to and relied upon allowing reference to the assessment of other properties is only incidental to Sec. 40 and can be used only in the absence of other evidence or as supplementary thereto to assist in forming a judgment as to the actual value.

There would seem to be little doubt that Dr. Holdcroft's house has cost considerable more than it is assessed at, but cost is not he criterion and is not necessary actual value. It was argued and much evidence was given to uphold the idea that the house is too expensive for the place and that it could not be sold for more than the assessment. If I accept the weight of evidence that idea must prevail and that the assessment is not unreasonable or improper. It will therefore stand.

No objection is taken as to the income assessment, but there is to the business assessment. Section Section 40, providing for the actual 10 of the Assessment Act, s.s. (f) applies and must so govern. The business assessment cannot be made arbitrarily, as the assessor in this case has done. Generally speaking for a physician the business assessment must be 50 per cent. of the assessed value of the land, but in the case where the building is used both as a residence and also as a place of business, the business assessment must be half of the above amount, or one quarter of the total land assessment. In this case therefore Dr. Holdcroft's business assessment should be $900.00 instead of $300.00 and Dr. Thompson's business assessment, now $300 should be placed at $525. The assessment will be amended accordingly.

E. C. Huycke, Judge.

Wood is one of the strongest substances in the world, but its strength lies in one direction only. A thin strip of wood cut with the grain will withstand about three times as heavy a pull as steel of equal weight.

TO LEND MONEY TO TOWNSHIP

Warkworth Hydro Can Let Council Have Part of Surplus.

TO BUILD TROUGH

(By a Staff Reporter)

WARKWORTH, Sept. 11—The Hydro Commission has relaxed somewhat the cast-iron regulations which bind this village in the matter of light and power and the local commission has been givenauthority to loan to the municipality of Percy all or any part of the surplus which has been accumulating ever since the service was installed about two years ago. This surplus now amounts to over $2,500 and the high tariff charged consumers for light is responsible for its existence.

Council Concurs

C. J. Boyce, a member of the local commission, called this matter to the attention of the Percy Council at its regular meeting Wednesday, and explained that the rate of interest charged for any loan would be 5 1-2 per cent. On motion of Deputy Reeve Nelson and Councillor Sykes, Reeve McCribbin and Treasurer Boyce were authorized to borrow from the commission money that might be required. It was felt that such an arrangement would benefit both parties to the contract as the commission would make a gain of 2 1-2 per cent over the interest earned if the money was kept in the bank and the township save on the interest chargs for loans.

Praise for Women's Institute

Mrs. W. E. Hermiston, president, Mrs. J. A. Sykes, vice president, and Mrs. C. Osborne, apepared as a delegation from the Women's Institute to ask permission to install on the road side near the cemetery a trough or some other receptacle to hold water that flows from a spring that was discovered when the foundation trench for the new vault was dug. The ladies said that the object was to have supply of water convenient for watering the flowers on the graves.

Reeve McCribbin informed the delegation that he had taken this matter up at a meeting of the Board of Health and that Health Officer Afmstrong had stated that there would be no objection to such action if a sign was put up informing the public that the water was not to be used for drinking purposes as it was liable to cause an outbreak of typhoid fever. The ladies agreed to follow these instructions and the permission sought was granted.

After the delegation had received Reeve McCribbin took occasion to remark that the Women's Institute is one of the best agencies in Percy Township for promoting the public welfare. It was organized the year before the breaking out of the Great War and all through the years of that conflict the members of the Institute were busy and comforts were sent regularly to the Percy boys overseas.

When the war was over the Institute took the lead in a movement which resulted in the building of the handsome community hall which was erected as a memorial to the soldiers who had fallen.

Their next public service, the Reeve said, was to hold entertainments for the purpose of raising money to build a vault the cemetery, something of which few places the size of Warkworth can boast. That vault, which cost $500, has been completed and paid for.

James Douglas, a former Percy Township resident, who is now with the Quaker Oats Company of Chicago, while on a visit to his former home last summer, heard of the good works the members of the Institute were performing and made them a liberal donation.

In Their Own Light

George Greer, suprintendent of County roads, dropped into the meeting to negotiate for the sale to the township of the superstructure of the old bridge which is being replaced by a ne wone at the foot of the hill on the Norham road. The Council can use the old material for replacing wooden bridges on township roads. Reeve McCribbin was given power to act in this matter.

Superintendent Greer stated that in his opinion the township is standing in its own light by refusing to abolish statute labor, thereby losing the liberal grants which the Province makes to all municipalities that have adopted the new system.

Oiling the Streets

A. C. Twiddy, representing the village asked for a grant of $4 for oiling the streets and this was allowed. It was only half of the grant made by the Council last year as a new kind of liquid for laying dust had been used.

A Bill Disallowed

A bill amounting to $32.55 for repairs to the Community Hall was left unpaid on motion of Councillors Laver and Sykes, as it was held that the expenditure had been ordered without authority by W. A. Kelly a member of the Community Hall Board. Reeve McCribbin is chairman of that Board and at its next meeting this matter will be ventilated.

The Council will meet again on Monday, October 5. The only absentee yesterday was Councillor Poole who was attending the Toronto Exhibition.

LAURA SECORD PRESENTS ROSES

150th Anniversary of Birth of Famous Heroine.

Sunday being the 150th anniversary of the birth of Laura Secord, heroine of Beaver Dams, a rose will be presented to every customer of Laura Secord Candy Shops to-morrow. Each shop will be specially decorated with roses for the occasion.

Laura Secord gained fame during the War of 1812 by conveying, at the risk of her life, a message of warning to Colonel Fitzgibbon of the enemy's intentions and plans at the battle of Beaver Dams. Due to her heroic efforts the enemy was frustrated and the Canadians gained the day. Her heroism has been commemorated in many ways, chief of which being a monument at Queenston Heights.

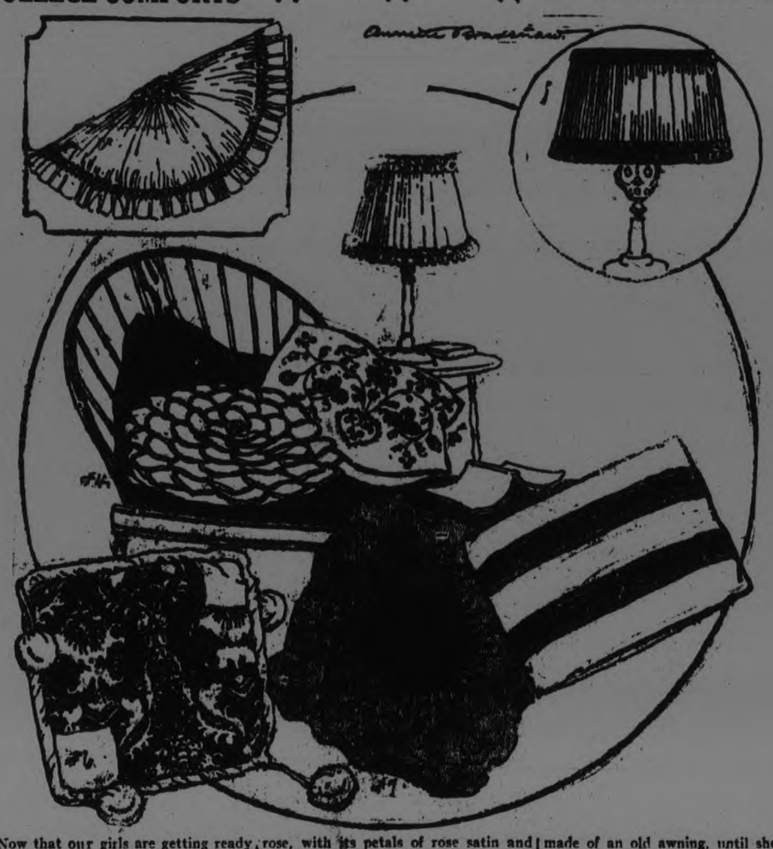
COLLEGE COMFORTS

By Annette Bradshaw



Now that our girls are getting ready to break away from home and enter or re-enter college life, we feel that we want them to have something to keep them comfortable and happy, for a contented mind and a few material comforts make for better study and higher honors.

Number one was a "tuck pillow" of black taffeta and little gold roses. Just the thing to tuck away behind a tired head when cramming for an exam.

Number five is one of the sturdy, practical black satin pillows with its quaint Czecho-Slovakian embroidery in brilliant colors.

Number six is almost too exquisite to use, with its center of rose and silver brocade, with the two cunning corners of silver cloth and the silver cording, cornered with an adorably puffy ball of the silver cloth.

Number eight one might think was made of an old awning, until she discovers that it is of striped upholstery taffeta in French blue and gold.

As to the lamp shades. One mother solved this problem by making them very simply of shirred silk, either plain or veiled with georgette, with a puffing at the top and bottom, or else a tiny ruffle of some contrasting material. Then, instead of sewing them to the frames, she ran a casing top and bottom through which she ran silk elastic. It was an easy matter for Daughter to buy a frame and slip the silk cover over it, instead of packing the wire frame and running the danger of having it "squashed."

A FASHION MODEL'S DIARY

By Grace Thorneliffe

A WOOLEN SPORTS FROCK IN THE BOIS DE ROSE SHADE

"Two-piece frocks seem to be the last cry," Gaby commented as I entered the manikins' room.

Gaby was standing in the middle of the room garbed in a lovely sports model, preparatory to going out and showing it for a client.

"What a perfectly stunning outfit!" I remarked.

"I think so, too," agreed Gaby, strutting up and down before the mirror.

"That is the new bois de rose shade epdorsed by Paris, is it not?" I asked, eager to show the knowledge of the smart new color which I had recently gleaned from Madame.

"It's none other," Gaby answered. She gave another glance in the mirror and asked:

"Don't you think the tint of it nude with a little red in it, is very becoming to me?"

"I do," I replied with a smile. "But I think you had better get on out and model it for your waiting client."

"Oh, she's talking with Madame and is in no hurry at all," Gaby assured me.

"I think she just comes and buys dresses to amuse herself, anyway," I ventured, for I had seen the client when I came through the salon, and knew that she came often and bought much.

"Sure," Gaby answered. "She has too much money."

Then Gaby adjusted the little bois de rose velvet hat she was wearing and sauntered out.

I found an excuse to go out soon after her, to see how the client was receiving the new frock.

She had asked Gaby to come over so she could have a good look. She examined it, and said to Madame:

"How effective that brown binding is with the soft shade of the frock."

"I think they're very effective together," Madame answered. Then she added:

"If you need a sports frock, you couldn't do better than to get this two-piece woolen model. Two-piece things are all the rage, you know."

"I like it, and I like the matching velvet hat," the client said.

"Frenchwomen, this season, are leaving no stone unturned to have their hats match their frocks exactly," Madame assured her.

The sale was made, and Gaby returned to the manikins' room well pleased with her job.

FAMOUS JEWELS

By Barbara Bayne

THE EVIL SPIRIT OF THE "HOPE" BLUE DIAMOND

From earliest times diamonds have always been associated with human success and prosperity, and whether they have glorified a god, magnified a monarch, or adorned a beloved, the possession of them has been accepted as signifying power. The "King of Jewels" has always fascinated all men.

There is one diamond, however, which is never associated, in any manner, with happiness or success. It is the "Hope" blue diamond—the gem with a curse.

It was brought from India in 1642 by Tavernier. In its rough state it weighed 112¼ carats. In 1668 he sold it to Louis XIV, who had it cut. This reduced its weight to 67-1-8 carats. One cleavage, weighing 13-3-4 carats was in the collection of the Duke of Brunswick. The other cleavage of 1 carat was evidently lost.

After the fall of the empire, when the crown jewels were stolen from the Garde-Meuble in 1792, many were recovered. But the blue diamond completely vanished. Then, in 1830 there appeared in the hands of a London dealer a sapphire blue gem apparently without a history. It was sold to Henry Thomas Hope for 18,000 pounds.

Without a doubt the "Hope Blue" as it became known, is identical with that worn by Louis XIV.

A New York jeweler purchased it from a London dealer. But apparently no one in America wanted it at his price, 60,000 pounds, and it finally went back to France, the property of M. Jacques Colot. He sold it to a Russian, Prince Kanitovski. The Prince lent it to an actress and the first night she wore it at the Folies Bergeres he shot her from a box. A few days late he was stabbed by revolutionists. Colot its former owner, went mad and committed suicide.

The diamond sustained its tradition of disaster, in the hands of its next owner. This was a Mr. Habid, who in 1909 went down with the French liner, La Seyne. Although he had disposed of the stone, people believed its evil spirit was still at work.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

We are two young girls, both seventeen years of age, who desire some of your timely advice. We do not keep company with an steadies but go out with four or five young men a week. Do you think this is too many. We allow them to put their arms around us, and give us an occasional kiss. We do not think this wrong, do you?

We dress fashionable, roll our stockings, use powder, and a little rouge, but do not go to extremes. We are both real pretty and a nice height, and intend to marry some one worthy of us. These parlour sheiks whom one reads so much of are detested by us, as well as by the majority of the people, but we like to see young men dress stylish with the odd bit of brilliantine.

Recently we went out with two tourists who treated us royally. Oh! if only all boys were like these two young tourists young girls like ourselves would have no trouble in getting suitable mates. Do you think we always will think so highly of them. Are we too young to think seriously of marriage.

PERFECT DARLINGS.

P. S.: Please answer as soon as possible as we are leaving for the States and would like to know your advice.

PERFECT DARLINGS: As you both appear to be perfectly satisfied with yourselves in your present condition, it would seem somewhat foolish for me to try and give you any advice with regard to your affairs. At seventeen years of age, a visiting list of four or five a week appears a generous portion, especially if each one of them is allowed to "pet". If you intend to marry someone "worthy of you", it might be as well to draw the line on so much promiscuous affection. No, it is quite likely that you may not always think so highly of the visiting young men who treat you "royally."

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a pretty young girl in my 'teens only my face is covered with freckles and I can't afford to buy cream. So please, dear Annie Laurie, tell me what to do. And oblige,

I LOVE ME.

I LOVE ME: Why not resign yourself to fate, and forget the freckles until such time as your finances permit of lotions that will help to remove them. If you are a pretty young girl, why worry? Many a short story writer enthuses over the "powder of golden freckles" that bridges his heroine's nose.

WEDDING BELLS.

RUTHERFORD—GILLESPIE

WARKWORTH, Sept. 11.—On September 5, at 3 o'clock, a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Gillespie, Grafton, when their daughter, Lulu, was united in marriage to Mr. Gordon Rutherford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Rutherford, Colborne.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked lovely in a gown of shrimp georgette with silver and white bead trimming. She carried a shower bouquet. Little Norma Bell, niece of the bride, was flower girl and carried a basket of pink and white asters. The bridal couple stood beneath an arch of evergreens decorated with pink and white flowers.

During the signing of the register, Miss Laurel Arkil of Castleton sang "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise." After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served to about fifty guests on the spacious verandah, which was decorated with evergreens and flowers.

The bride received many beautiful gifts of cut glass and silver. The groom's gift to the bride was a green gold pin set with a diamond and two whole pearls.

Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford left on a motor trip east, crossing at Ogdensburg and returning through the Green and White Mountains and crossing again at Niagara.

The bride's travelling costume was an ensemble suit of navy poiret twill and choker of red fox. On their return they will reside near Colborne.

PROGRESS MADE BY BOY SCOUTS

Reports to Annual Meeting of Local Association Are Encouraging.

FINANCES GOOD

All the officers of the Peterborough Boy Scout Association took a step up at the annual meeting in the Council chamber last night. Mayor Turner, who has been president, succeeds W. Deane Tyrer, as District Commissioner. The other officers are: Fred Roy, President; Rev. Paul Costello, first vice-president; J. John, second vice-president, George Robertson, secretary-treasurer, and executive members A. Mowat and Rev. J. D. Paterson.

Reports were read by the secretary, showing the finances of the Association to be in good shape, and the work to have been efficiently carried out.

Frank C. Irwin, executive secretary of the Provincial Association, was present and addressed the members, speaking particularly on the value of linking the work with churches or other existing organizations.

Bentley Walker reported for the scoutmasters on the question of work being done by the scouts at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition and the necessity of a training course and winter quarters.

The secretary's report is as follows:

The first meeting was held August 20th, 1924, and altogether twelve meetings were held during the year. The second Tuesday in each month was set apart for the metings, which have been held in the City Hall.

Commissioner Tyrer instituted and conducted a Gillwell Course of Training for Scoutmasters in the Chamber of Commerce during the winter months. He also instituted and conducted Friday evening classes in the Market Hall for training of Patrols and Patrol leaders. The Commissioner put a large amount of time and effort into these training classes, and it is expected activities in Peterborough founded on these special classes of instruction will form a foundation, on which the movement will build and grow. Too much praise cannot be given Mr. Tyrer for his unceasing efforts to do anything and everything possible to encourage the spread of scouting.

We received an invitation from Provincial Headquarters to send a representative to Ebor Park Gillwell Training Course, and the Association selected Clarence Corbett to represent Pterborough.

The Boy Scouts' Camp was instituted August 22nd to 29th which was a success.

Reports will be received from other committees dealing with finance and property. During the year the sum of $438.51, in cash has been received, with expenditures of $409.61, leaving a balance in the treasury of $28.90. We accepted the responsibility of raising $50.00 towards the maintenance of Provincial headquarters, and this money is due and payable October 1st.

Citizens generally have contributed funds or materials very generously to carry on the work, and to those who so contributed, we owe thanks, as they made the work possible.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. John, secretary.

FUTURE BRIGHT JAPANESE TRADE

Increased Exports of Raw Silk—More Cotton Sent Abroad.

TOKYO, Sept. 11. — While Japanese trade conditions during the first half of the present year were not all that had been hoped for, and the industrial situation just now is extremely bad, the authorities, in the official report of the Department of Commerce and Industry, state that no pessimism need be entertained for the future. The report shows that during the six months 22 articles out of 30 chief exports of the country increased in value over the corresponding period of last year and only eight articles decreased in value.

The report states that raw silk valued at 334,845,000 yen exported during the first half of this year shows an increase of 70,913,000 yen over the corresponding period of last year. Cotton cloth exports totaled 199,647,000 yen, an increase over the corresponding period of last year of 46,385,000 yen.

Among exports which decreased in value from the corresponding period of last year are counted silk fabrics, which totalled 53,718,000 yen so far this year, a decrease of 5,040,000 yen from the year before. Silk waste and floss silk exports totaled 11,150,000 yen this year, showing a decrease of 1,284,000 yen from 1924. Marine products, machinery, beans, buttons, iron, and beer also decreased in export value.

As to import, the first half of this year witnessed an increase of 14 articles out of 30, compared with the corresponding period of last year, and 16 articles showed a decrease in value. Among the imports with increased in value are raw cotton, totaling 601,070,000 yen, showing a rise of 56.20 per cent. or 216,568,000 yen, over 384,502,000 yen of the corresponding period of last year. Wool imports totaled 84,635,000 yen during the first half of this year, an increase of 43.70 per cent. or 25,728,000 yen over a year before. Woolen fabric imports this year totaled 35,050,000, an increase of 8,421,000 yen over a year before. Rice and bran imports totaled 65,796,000 yen this year, an increase of 64.40 per cent., or 25,587,000 yen, over the corresponding period of last year. Beans, bean cake and crude sugar imports also increased in their volumes and value.

The fluctuation in imports is far larger than the increase or decrease in exports, which is responsible for the adverse trade balance. Silk exports were favorable this year, due to the continued active demand for this class of goods in the United States, and cotton fabrics and yarn exports were also supported well, despite the recent anti-foreign agitation in Shanghai and other parts of China.

ENGLAND SEEKS A UNITED AIR FORCE

Move to Amalgamate Land and Marine Airplane Services.

LONDON, Sept. 11. — (United Press.)—The long expected parliamentary fight for the amalgamation of the British land and naval air forces, it is now understood, will break soon after parliament convenes in November.

When it comes it will be the English counterpart of the battle which Ex-Brigadier General Mitchell waged in Washington last winter for a separate Air Force for the United States, a battle which he lost and following which he was demoted to the rank of colonel.

The same bitter opposition that General Mitchell faced from high naval officers will in all probability also be forthcoming here, but the pro-amalgamationists are taking ample time to rally their arguments and votes, and it is understood that they have more than a bare chance of winning their fight.

The Unionist Naval Committee, a strong body of between fifty and sixty members of parliament are solidly back of the move, and they expect when their campaign is organized to raid the other parties for a large quota of favorable votes.

KISSING PHANTOM CAUSES TALK AMONG FOREIGN DELEGATES TO PARIS SPIRITUALIST CONGRESS

Madeline, Says the Medium, is Fond of Kissing Portuguese Delegate.

WAITS TO BE KISSED.

PARIS, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press)—Madeline, an amorous apparition, has caused much discussion among the foreign delegates attending the International Spiritualist Congress. She is a kisser par excellence, and herself believes in reciprocal returns. It is asserted by spiritualists that Madeline is the materialization of a 19-year-old French girl who died in 1908. Alexander Thibault, French delegate to the Congress is responsible for the kissing ghost's appearance. Much was heard of Madeline at a spirit soiree given last night by the Duchess of Hamilton, which was attended by the foreign delegates.

M Thibault asserts that Madeline was fond of kissing M. Costa of the Portugese delegation on the cheek and then waiting to be kissed in return. It was not reported whether M. Costa complied with the wish of the spirit maiden. This coy phantom also kisses, M. Thibault, but she rebuffed a director of the Paris Theatre who tried to grasp her arm, thinking her a fake. The soiree in reality was an experience meeting at which those present were invited to recount personal meetings with the super-normal. A friend of the late W. T. Stead, related how, after his death, friends continued to meet him. They always left Mr. Stead's chair vacant, and it used to move and lift itself up of its own accord. Once they put a heavy flower pot containing daisies on the seat to keep the chair from moving. Each blossom individually was seen to make a bow when Mr. Stead's name was mentioned.

Toronto Market Inactive With Prices Holding Firm

TORONTO, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—With a lessening of activity a slight weakness developed on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning, led by Brazilian, which receded one and an eighth to 71 5-8, but as a whole the market held firm. Canadian Canners Preferred improved an eighth at 57½, but the less active Common eased down 3-8 to 13½.

Steel of Canada was marked up a point at 91, and Barcelona further gained a quarter at 23¼.

Wheat Prices Averaged Lower Due To Great Yield

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—Owing largely to 17,000,000 bushels increase in the official forecast of wheat production in Canada, wheat prices here averaged lower today during early transactions. On the other hand, Liverpool quotations were steadier than had been expected. Commission houses were generally buyers on declines, but were sellers when prices bulged. Opening 1-8c to 1 3-8c lower, December 148¾ to 148 3-4, and May 151½ to 152, was followed by numerous fluctuations that kept near to the initial figures. Corn and oats were relatively firm as compared with wheat. Speculative buying of corn was in evidence. Opening at 7-8 decline to ½c advance, December 85 5-8 to 86, the corn market scored transient gains, both for December delivery and May. Oats started at 3-8c off, December 41¼ to 41 5-8c. Later, the market showed a slight general advance.

Provisions were firmer, sympathizing with an upturn in the value of hogs.

Vipond sold one point lower at 114 and Castle Trethewey, Lorrain and Mining Corporation each were one point higher at 103, 9, and 295 respectively.

MENTAL TELEPATHY.

One of the most sensational acts of the year which has been carried on in many cities of the United States, is that given by Francois, a young Frenchman, who has been on this continent since the close of the war, in which he was engaged. In a demonstration of mental telepathy, blindfolded securely by local citizens, he will drive a car up and down our busiest streets between 10 and 12 o'clock. Commencing at the Chevrolet Garage, 390 Water street, north to Smith, then west to George, south on George to C.P.R. station, return on George to Charlotte street, west on Charlotte to Monaghan Road, then back to the Chevrolet Garage on Water street.

On Wednesday afternoon next he will drive a car, blindfolded, on the Exhibtion track, at 60 miles an hour.

These are thrilling acts, and Mr. Webber Turner, who secured the attraction for the Fair, says it has proved a wonderful attraction everywhere it has been carried on.

PRICE OF COAL TO REMAIN HIGH

BOSTON, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—A prediction that the price of anthracite coal will rmain high for a considerable time was made yesterday by John Hays Hammond, chairman of the New England fuel committe, at a meeting here to discuss the fuel situation. The education of the public in the use of bituminous coal was the remedy proposed by Mr. Hammond.

Conservatives Careful In Distributing Homage

It was remarked at yesterday's gathering of the Liberal-Conservative Association picnic at Bethany, that the assembly showed a great deal of discrimination in according marks of respect where such homage is usually given.

Every man, woman and child was on his or her feet when the National Anthem was sung. Practically the entire gathering got up when Mr. Meighen entered, but only a negligible proportion rose when the Bethany Band played "O Canada."

GRAHAM SPEAKS AT KINGSVILLE

Replies to Criticisms Made By Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen.

PEOPLE WILL DECIDE.

KINGSVILLE, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—Addressing a monster gathering of South Essex Liberals here this afternoon, Hon. George P. Graham replied at length to the criticism offered by Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, of the Government's railway policy. The Minister of Railways stated that he found little in the utterances of Mr. Meighen but a reiteration of what he had said in Parliament, and declared that the public, on October 29, would show they had not been deluded by the Opposition leader's "expert manipulation of figures." More money was spent on the National Railways by Mr. Meighen's government, he said, than by the present administration. Mr. Graham asserted that the railway situation was steadily improving, and this would continue if the King Government were given a new lease of life.

OTHERS UNHURT.

BRANTFORD, Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—E. C. Walker, of Toronto, of the Canadian National Railways, was killed this morning when his automobile was struck by a Canadian National train at a level crossing near Cainsville, Ont.

He was 82 years of age, and a director of the Canadian National Exhibition. A baby one and a half years of age, seated in the lap of its mother, Mrs. A. Bratton, of Hamilton, escaped with a bruise or two.

The party, which also included Mrs. N. Woodruff, of Detroit, who was driving, and Mrs. W. Woodruff, a sister-in-law of the driver, on approaching a well-known and much shunned crossing, heard and saw the approaching train, but owing to the slippery condition of the road, Mrs. Woodruff was unable to stop the car. Mr. Walker was taken to a near-by house but expired in a few minutes.

SECURITY PACT MEETING SMALL

INVITATION DRAWN UP

GENEVA, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—"The smaller, the better," is Rt. Hon. Austen Chamberlain's ideal for the forthcoming security pact conference between the Allies and Germany.

"I very much hope that Italy will be at the conference," the British Foreign Secretary told the press today, but, when asked if Czecho-Slovakia and Poland would also be represented, he explained, "Oh, let's get along by degrees. When the conference takes place you will see who is at it." The letter of invitation to Germany has not been despatched, although its terms have been agreed upon by Mr. Chamberlain and the French and Belgian Foreign Ministers, Briand and Vandervelde.

GERMANY DEMANDS REVISION VERSAILLES TREATY TERMS

Will Not Enter League of Nations Unless Boundaries Are Rectified.

WANTS HER COLONIES

League Wants Germany as Member for Fuller Development.

By HENRY WOOD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

GENEVA, Sept. 11. — (United Press.) — The question of Germany's admission to the League of Nations will be one of the most important subjects to come before the Sixth Annual Assembly of the League, which convenes here September 7th.

The necessity of Germany's participation in the League, in order to render possible the final solution of a great number of questions left open by the war, has now become so imperative that Germany has attained for herself a position where she can bargain on the matter.

This is realized now just as fully in Germany as it is in League circles. As far as the League is concerned, however, Germany's bargaining will have to be with the individual members of the League, and especially with the Allies, instead of with the League as a whole.

Germany Welcome.

In League circles Germany's admission is frankly desired as an indispensable factor for the future full development of the League itself, to say nothing of a final readjustment of the European situation, but the League insists Germany must come in on the same basis as every other state. The League can neither offer inducements nor diminish the obligations which League membership entails.

If Germany will present her application, Leaguers feel they can guarantee her not only unanimous election but also a permanent seat on the Council, and as a consequence the question of Germany's admission rests only with Germany herself.

However, by holding out as long as she has, Germany has frankly secured very much of an advantage and it is quite apparent that she is not going to present her much desired application for membership until she has wrung, ether from the League itself as a whole, or from its individual members, and especially the Allies, every concession that she can possibly get in return.

Secret Negotiations.

As a consequence it is expected that the entire session of the Assembly will be marked by a mass of private negotiations between German representatives, either official of unofficial at Geneva, and the representatives of the various members of the League.

The particular concessions which Germany hopes to get by way of the League are entirely different from those such as the evacuation of the Rhine, etc., that she is now trying to attain by direct negotiation with the Allies in return for her participation in a Europen security agreemnt.

German Demands.

As Leaguers understand the Situation, Germany's three principal aims via the League are:

First, a possible union with Austria.

Second, a League mandate on some of Germany's former colonial possessions.

Third, a positive revision of her eastern frontiers as regards Poland.

However, the League insists that it has little if any juridiction in these questions and that Germany will therefore have to do her dickering with the individual governments present at Geneva during the Assembly.

League Doubts Its Authority.

Of these three qustions the one on which the League is the least certain as to its attitude and jurisdiction is that of a closer union, between Germany and Austria.

Relative to the second point of Germany's ambitions League opition is definitely fixed. The League mandates over Germany's former colonies as well as the former Turkish possessions taken after the war were given by the Allied powers themselves.

Finally the next great point in Germany's League and foreign policy is to secure a rectification of her frontiers with Poland that will give her back some of the Upper Silesian mineral basin and that will permit of possibly a better solution of the Danzig corridor.

As regards this point, League circles are generally unanimous in declaring that no rectification should be imposed on Poland..

The first woman to become a member of the British Institute of Automobile Engineers is Miss C. Griff, who recently presided at a session of the International Conference of Women Engineers at Wembley. Miss Griff is the director of an all-women firm, which manufactures engineering tools and household appliances.

Now, what would you do, in a case like this? Fine morning, get up early, enter log cabin to begin big day's work and write long list of directions for Nature Lore readers, so they will know a pink-eyed-waddling kazoozoo when they see it, then get settled down to business and have all the plans held up while Excelsior rattles his old boneshaker of an outboard motor across the calm lake coming as fast and furiously as that old tub will waddle through the water, right for our shore.

All plans for nature directions held up, waiting to see why Excelsior is laughing so hard. No wonder his boat leaks, with that rattling engine and his mountain shifting laughter, which rises to a boom and then descends to a running giggle.

"De l'our!" says Excelsior, and that means bears. I can see the nature directions beginning to be put off again. I hate long lists of what to do to tame a bear and that sort of thing, so I guess we will be lazy again and waste the whole plans, to tell about what makes Excelsior laugh.

Half in English and half in French and the other three-quarters in animal motions, mixed up with rafter shaking laughter, it all amounts to this: Mrs. Charbonneau, which name means Mrs. Coal-and-water, was up at half-past three in the morning, rocking her huge churn, trying to get some butter made in a hurry.

The year before last, Mr. Charbonneau had kept a pet bear until it got too large, when he released it. Well, it must have told its children a few of the farm-yard secrets, for one small bear, looking very much like the old one, fell into the churn when Mrs. Charbonneau was in the house putting another stick of wood on the fire. When she came out onto the verandah, he was inside the huge barrel-shaped home-made thing, gobbling up the mixture of milk and butter. Then the whole works wobbled and fell off the verandah, but the bear stayed inside, eating.

Then he tried to get out, but his bulk was bigger than it had been before he went in, so there he stuck, one horrible mess of bear, butter and milk.

The folks put a collar on him, chained him up and managed to get him out, without breaking the churn. He is over there now, licking off the mixture.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silvar

WHY MR. BLUEBIRD IS ALWAYS SO HAPPY

"Well," Peggy laughed softly when she saw two beautiful bluebirds sitting on the garden patch. One was poking a big, fat, juicy bug down the other one's mouth. "That baby is almost as big as you are, isn't it?"

Both bluebirds opened their pretty bills and laughed merrily.

"Baby!" chirped the one who had shared the bug. "Baby! Why, my dear, this isn't a baby. This is my wife, Mrs. Bluebird," and both Mr. and Mrs. Bluebird bowed very politely to Peggy. "And you are Peggy Brown, I believe?"

"Well, of all things," laughed Peggy softly. "What an attentive husband you are to be sure. Do you always feed your wife like you feed the baby birds?"

"He always does," chirped Mrs. Bluebird. "I guess there isn't a nicer husband in all the feathered flock. We have just had a terrible experience. You see, Daddy Bluebird and I always come back from the South early enough to rebuild our house before it's nesting time. We came back rather earlier than usual this year, for the old nest in the limb of the apple tree was very badly in need of repair. We had just about finished it when we went out in search of a few grasses to line the nest, and when we returned we found it all torn up."

"He Helped Care for Them."

"Why, who in the world would do such a terrible thing?" asked Peggy. "Surely not my yellow kitty?"

"Goodness, no!" chirped Daddy Bluebird. "It was Mrs. Jenny Wren. We watched and saw her tearing it to pieces. We found out she wanted a nest, so we just told her she could have it and we've just finished building another. Will you come and see it?"

Mr. and Mrs. Bluebird flew to an old apple tree right next to the one where their old home had been, and Peggy peeked into the cozy little nest. There, just as warm and comfy as could be, rested five pale-blue eggs, while on the limb nearby the nest sat six lovely little bluebirds.

"These are my second nestful," laughed the proud Mother Bluebird, "and here are the first brood," and Mrs. Bluebird called her little bluebird babies and introduced them to Peggy.

"But who takes care of these babies while you are sitting on your eggs?" asked Peggy, stroking first one little bluebird, then another. "I should think you'd just about have your hands full with two families."

"I would if it wasn't for Daddy Bluebird," replied Mrs. Bluebird. "He is a wonderful fellow. When I sat on my first brood he brought me food and never passed the door without stopping to tell me something pleasant. Then when the eggs were hatched he helped care for them. When I decided to raise another family, it was Daddy Bluebird who played day and night nurse for the babies. He even let them sleep on the limbs at his side."

"No wonder folks say it brings happiness to see a bluebird," laughed Peggy. "Daddy Bluebird is so unselfish he radiates happiness."

"I try to do all the good I can," chirped Daddy Bluebird. "That's all we're good for."

"I guess you do your share," said Peggy. "And I must be going now, as I want to help mama with the work," and bidding her new friends good-by, Peggy ran into the house to help her mama.

SAYS LIBERAL WILL RUN AGAINST KING—NORTH YORK

The following is from the Toronto Telegram relative to a recent Liberal caucus in Toronto:

"Upshot of Premier King's peace-making efforts between the two Liberal factions in Toronto, while he was in this city, will be the presence of another Liberal candidate against him in North York.

Hon. G. N. Gordon, Deputy Speaker, presided over a "peace" gathering at the Ontario Club last night. According to an eye-witness, it was the wildest conference held in Toronto in many a day. Mr. Gordon suggested that there be an amalgamation between the official association and the "outlaw" association. This was resolutely opposed by Dr. Cascaden and others of the 'official' party, and for two hours pandemonium and bitter personalities held sway. The meeting broke up in disorder and the so-called "outlaw" association reconvened among themselves and decided to oppose both King and Gordon in their own ridings, as well as to put another Liberal candidate in the field in every seat in Toronto in which an official Liberal is nominated..

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.

An active state of affairs may be expected on this day, judging by the inciting place of the moon with relation to Mercury, which may stimulate all commercial as well as professional engagements. Saturn, in trine with Luna, assists this auspicious rule, making way for progress and substantial return for industry and application by the removal of some stubborn obstacle or long-continued congestion. However, be careful with new projects.

Those whose birthday it is are under the promise of an active year, in which steady progress may attend quiet industry and appreciation. A long-thwarting obstruction may be removed to make way for substantial growth. It is urged that there be precaution against deception in new ventures. A child born on this day may be clever, versatile, steady and industrious, and should make a fair success through these endowments.

China's smallest nurse, Alice Chu, weighing sixty-eight pounds, and measuring scarcely four feet, has completed a special course at Johns Hopkins University and is now on her way home to Peking, where she is to take a position as a head ward nurse in the medical college of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Starting as a local secret society in Philadelphia in 1869, the Knights of Labor was the first society which aimed to gather all the workers of all trades into a single organization. It held its first general convention in 1878 and claimed a membership of more than half a million some ten years later, when it reached the zenith of its power and importance.

I found it not only quieted my nerves, but it also relieved me of hot flashes, dizziness and backaches. Before I took the 'Prescription' I had the strangest sort of pain, like a knife cutting thru my back. DRIVE ON RIFFS HAS STARTED FRENCH HAVE REACHED OLD LINE

Offensive Aims to Force Abd-el-Krim to Accept Peace.

LAND REGAINED

Most Teritory Taken in Riffian Drive Has Been Recaptured.

By JOHN O'BRIEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

FEZ, Sept. 11. — The great Franco-Spanish offensive, aiming to force Abd-el-Krim into accepting peace, has started. The French drive has already reached the old line in the central section of the front held at the beginning of the summer.

The old French front was, in general, about forty miles north of Fez. Riffian pressure against the French blockhouses finally compelled abandonment of the advanced lines and the French began a "readjustment."

At one time at the height of the Riffian successes, Abd-el-Krim's men were threatening Fez from positions twenty miles or more distant.

TRIBESMEN ACTIVE.

FEZ, French Morocco, Sept. 11. —(Canadian Press.)—Intensive artillery preparations by the French on a 45 mile front in the central section of the battle line in Morocco has been completed and French troops are beginning to get under way in a big drive against the rebellious Moroccan tribesmen. Smaller offensive movements also are being undertaken by French at other points along the battle front.

The Riffians on the Ouergha Valley front are rushing up reinforcements to the centre of the line. Two thousand of their riflemen have been seen in the Bab-Hoceine region and trenches are being hurriedly dug by tribesmen at Taonat.

The tribesmen continue active on the western section of the front. They are declared to have made another attack in Ishoual, which was repelled by the garrison, aided by foreign flyers under Mayor Sussan of Ottawa, and other air squadrons. The latest reports from Madrid are to the effect that, while the French are delivering their attack against the Moors along the Ouergha, the tribesmen have begun a violent offensive against the Spaniards to the north round Tetuan, capital of the Spanish Protectorate.

A French communique says: "We started our attacks today, two wings north of the Ouergha enveloping Terroual (near Ouezzan, in the west) and Tafrant (to the east).

"These attacks are developing satisfactorily."

French advance guards occupied Djebel Nesned, Sidi Liman, and Achirkane, and to the eastward, Sahela, Achaizh, Astar and Sker.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

CONVENTION HERE.

It is unofficially announced today that the Conservative nomination will be held in Peterborough on Thursday, September 24. This will leave five clear weeks for the campaign.

GORDON AT BELLEVILLE

Hon. G. N. Gordon is today one of the speakers at Belleville, where Premier King addresses a big gathering. Mr. Gordon was home on a flying visit this morning.

MEETING AT LAKEFIELD

The Conservative women of Lakefield are holding a meeting today at which Mrs. Howard Fallis is to speak. Mrs. Fallis is adding to her already brilliant record by her speaking ability in this campaign.

OPPONENT DOUBTFUL

The question of who will oppose Hon. G. N. Gordon in this riding is still unanswered. Of those named a few days ago only Mr. Burnham has definitely withdrawn, and there are left as possibilities Roland Denne, C. H. Ackerman, J. F. Strickland, V. J. McElderry, E. A. Peck, and Mrs. Howard Fallis. Mrs. Fallis is being urged by many women voters to allow her name to go before the convention.

THEY HAVE A BIG WEEK

Orono, convention town of Durham County, has a lot of election excitement slated for next week. On Monday, the Conservative convention will elect officers and nominate a candidate. Then on Wednesday the Liberal party will hold a mass meeting to select a candidate.

CAMPAIGN IN MARITIMES

TORONTO, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—Next week the scene of the major campaign in connection with the coming general elections for the House of Commons will shift to the Maritime Provinces. Premier King and Mr. Meighen, leader of the Conservative opposition, will both complete their Ontario tours on Saturday.

ABOLITION OF

tice on Mr. Meighen that such a reply might be expected, but also that Hansard carried an accurate record of what the Conservative Leader said in the House when this question was raised.

Pledge on Senate Reform.

It was toward the end of his address of almost two hours duration that Premier King dealt with the Senate and its reform. Despite Mr. Meighen's attempt to belittle the efforts of the Government, the latter was determined to effect reforms from within, and toward that end hoped to have the constitution so amended that these reforms would be possible, said the speaker.

"Mr. Meighen has said that this talk of Senate reform is the same old cry, and that I have not one single proposal of reform for the Senate to which I dare commit my Government.. I might add that I expected he would say that. Well, here is one specific proposal on which I am not afraid to commit myself or my Government, and that as I do not think Senators should be appointed for life. We have had men in the Senate who have reached the age of 102. They might do as advisers to Noah, but not to a Parliament in sympathy with the will of the people.. I repeat, one reform we insist on is that appointments for life shall not be the basis of appointments to the Senate. Further, in that Wingham speech of his Mr. Meighen charges that I intend to hamstring the Senate and thus destroy the independence of Parliament. That is not true. I have always believed that every man who goes into the Senate should exercise his own judgmnt in the freest possible way. At no time have I ever suggested other than that When I spoke of Senate reform in my address at Richmond Hill I meant nothing concerning egislation coming from House of Commons, but the reform of the Senate itself, so that it would be more responsive to the popular will of responsible Government. I have never suggested that the Senate must vote this way or that upon any question. Had I done so I would be open to severe criticism, and the charge of Mr. Meighen that I am attempting to destroy the independence of Parliament.

"All I have said to the new Liberal appointees to the Senate was that they had to express their willingness to champion the cause of Senate reform, and I repeat that no further appointments will be made by the present Government to the Senate except upon the distinct understanding that the appointee will give wholehearted advocacy and support to any measure of Senate reform the Government as a part of Government policy, may ask both Houses of Parliament to adopt."

What Liberal Tariff Does.

James Malcolm, ex-M.P., for North Bruce, said the best evidence of the workability of the King Government's tariff was the fact that when it was ushered in opponents said it would ruin the Canadian farm implement industry. The Massey-Harris Company, at that time, had a deficit of $12,00 0,000. Today, thanks to the King Government's tariff that company is free of debt and operating on its own money.

As for the alleged grievance of the textile manufacturers and others, Mr. Malcolm quoted figures to show that the stock of these had increased on an average of $110 a share during the time the King Government was in power. The stock of the Dominion Canners, Penman Company Canadian Cotton Company, Dominion Glass Company, Spanish Pulp and Paper Company, the Ogilvie Flour Company and even the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company, had all increased most substantially during the King regime. This did not harmonize very well with "Mr. Meighen's nightshade philosophy," Mr. Malcolm said. As for the business failures in Canada last year these amounted to 2,312 but let it be stressed that only 69 of that large total was due to competition. Of the rest, 887 failed for lack of capital, 118 for lack of experience of their promoters and 501 from inability and incompetence.

Short but interesting addresses were given by Thomas Marshall, Liberal candidate for Haldimand, who represented Lincoln County in the Provincial Parliament for three terms, and by Hon. George N. Gordon, new Federal Minister of Immigration.

BISHOP O'BRIEN SAYS FAREWELL

MANY AT STATION.

On the occasion of his departure from the city, en route for a trip to Rome and the Continent, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien was attended a monster gathering of the members of his congregation, last evening.

Special farewell services were held at St. Peter's Cathedral at 8 o'clock last night. The big building was crowded for the occasion, and in the sanctuary were the majority of the priests of the diocese, taking part in the Benediction services, solemnized by the Bishop, assisted by Rev. Dean Kelly of Trout Creek, deacon; Rev. P. J. McGuire, subdeacon, and Rev. J. J. O'Brien, of the Sacred Heart parish, and Rev. V. McFadden of Parry Sound, honorary deacons.

After the Benediction, the choir sang 'Holy God, we praise Thy Name," the Bishop gave the congregation his blessing and spoke briefly, asking them to pray for his safe journey and return, and thanking them for their attendance, and the entire congregation adjourned to the C.N.R. station, where His Lordship bade good-bye personally to as many of his parishioners as possible, and was given three rousing cheers as the train pulled out.

The Bishop will be accompanied on his trip by Dr. J. V. Gallivan and Rev. Father Quilty of Douglas, Ontario.

KIWANIS HEAR OF TRAINING SCHOOL

Many Were Fined, But Very Few Were Found Wanting.

COLLECTOR BUSY.

President Charlie Cook indulged himself to-day in a veritable orgy of fines on the occasion of the Kiwanis luncheon at the Empress Hotel.Few were the members who did not incur his displeasure and the sergeant at arms was many times left to gaze in bewilderment as he wondered who the next victim was.

Kiwanian Doug. Paterson started the fun when he demanded to know whether a certain coal company planned making deliveries on the "a la carte" or "coal de sac" plans.

Previous to this Lloyd Hamilton had been pounced upon and relieved of ten of his "forty cents." For ten minutes the heavy barrage of fines was levelled at shrinking Kiwanians, who in the excitement resorted to "gambling" and "indecent language." Their offences drew the maximum sentences.

Walter Kidd repeated his exploitation of the "On to Ottawa" movement, and Rev. Mr. Bousfield, visitor, gave an authoritative resume of the road conditions.

Jack Marshall went on record for extending to Kiwanian G. N. Gordon felicitations from the club regarding the honor he had brought to Peterborough and which was incidentally reflected to the Kiwanis Club.

Boys' Training.

Dr. G. E. Reaman proceeded to tell of his work in the Bowmanville Training School for Boys. He does not want this school to be termed an institution nor the boys who are sent there called delinquents. He does not believe that a boy who breaks the law is essentially bad. The boys with whom his work is concerned are unadjusted boys, and his school is in the same category as a hospital. So far as is possible, boys who leave his school will be protected from any stigma.

The philosophy governing the school is the rehabilitation of the youth to fit him for entrance into society and to further this end, the phases of life there embody elements of the home school and leisure periods.

The propensities of the boy are determined and he is developed along the line for which he shows the preference and adaption. A graduated system is used, whereby the life of the building is a process of self-elevation to responsible positions in the dormitory and playground.

In order that development of the school may be rapid, only the simplest cases are at present taken, the intelligence rating at present being 80 per cent. Physical and psychological tests determine the mark given.

TRANS-PACIFIC AVIATORS FOUND AFTER FLOATING FOR NINE DAYS WITHOUT FOOD IN RUINED PLANE

Men Had Gone Hungry For Four Days and Had Drunk Rain Water.

RECEIVED MESSAGES.

Could Not Reply To Searchers, as Antenna Was Under Water.

HONOLULU, September 11 — Canadian Press. — Commander John Rodgers and his intrepid crew of four of the lost trans-pacific airplane PN-No. 10, who were found riding the waves on their disabled craft yesterday after a nine days' search, passed four days without food, it was learned when the men where brought to shore last night.

The crippled plane with its sodden of adventurers, was found by a submarine, 15 miles off the island of Kauai, thus ending the search which began on September 1st, when the plane, which left San Francisco on August 31st, for Honolulu, sent a radio message that the gasoline supply was exhausted, and the plane would take to the water.

When found yesterday the rescued aviators refused to leave their plane, but obtained food and water from the rescuing submarine as they were being towed ashore.

The crew plainly showed the strain which they had been under for nine days. They were heavily bearded and their faces were tanned by the tropical sun. The wings of the sea plane were badly damaged by the sea but the hull was intact.

Food and water were exhausted on the fifth day after the plane was forced into the sea by the lack of fuel.

The fabric was torn off the plane while it was being buffeted about at sea, and and was used to catch water when the aircraft was tossed through the showers. "This saved our lives," they said.

The messages radio cast by the searching planes and surface ships, were all picked up by the downed seaplane, but it could not put messages on the air in response. This was due to the fact that its drooping antenna was under water.

pecially good. Joseph Grierson has a beautiful and varied collection, ranging all the way from gladioli to vases of rustling everlastings, and including tiny pots of dark purple velvet petunias and begonias, and large bunches, flanking either side, of what the botanist calls Rudbeckia fulgens, of the popular Black-Eyed Susan family.

Jordan Brothers have an effective exhibit of carefully-placed palms, ferns, colored foliages, rose-splashed lilies and begonias.

A. Blade and Sons show some beautiful gladioli, with special charming specimens in the scarlet "Love Fire," the deep crimson "War," and the pale shell pink "Marshal Foch." Deep red asters are ere also and some of the popular everlastings. A second stand arranged by this firm shows begonias in pots, foliages and ferns.

The Peterboro Floral Company have an ingeniously-arranged formal showing, with high lights in lovely metallic-finished wreaths. Their orange tiger lilies and purple asters, with gladioli and a quantity of fine ferns, make a splendid exhibit.

Children Do Well.

The children have done very well this year, and their special tables show some excellent examples of their work in field and garden. Asters and marigolds and some fine looking zinnias, are in their floral showing, while beets, parsnips, turnips, carrots and onions occupy places of honor in the vegetable section.

A couple of booths, decorated with green feathery foliage, in the centre of the hall, are devoted to the showing of the silver trophies donated by Messrs. W. R. Cormack, T. E. Bradburn and A. W. Cressman, and to the dispensing of light refreshments, the latter booth being in charge of Mrs. R. R. Hall. Mrs. T. Wells Fraser and Mrs. H. M. Yelland have charge of the section where entries are made and enquiries answered.

This evening, a very attractive programme has been arranged, with a children's flower parade, sponsored by the Kiwanis Club, who are giving three prizes for the parade, a children's chorus of about eighty voices, conducted by Miss M. Rannie, vocal solos by local artists, educational talks on flowers and their culture, given by Messrs. J. Grierson and A. E. Prest, and the awarding of prizes by the president, Dr. J. E. Middleton, in connection with the recent lawn and garden competition.

A busy worker at the Show last evening was Leon Frazer, who was responsible for the success of last year's first attempt in this direction, and postponed his return trip to his office in Toronto yesterday afternoon in order to assist with arrangements for last night's opening.

LAKEFIELD TEAM LOST AT SOFTBALL

Dear Bay Team Was on the Long End of a 17-14 Score.

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 11—On Friday evening last the local softball team motored to Wesley Church where they met the Deer Bay team for the return game of their series. The game was played on the grounds near the church and was fast and well contested, each player battling his hardest and running in his best marathon styel. C. S. Tanner was the umpire and gave satisfaction to both teams, though he, himself, complained of much interference from the players. As the sun was setting and the period of daylight was uncertain no time was lost and a game of five innings was played.

The following made up the Lakefield team—C. Blewett, M. Spencer, W. Morrison, G. Connell H. Wagar, A. Burrows, Dr. Smith and Mr. Roseberry.

The Deer Bay team were—Theo. Nicholls, W. Gould, Chas. Carter, W. Garver, "Cine" Gould, Mr. Murray, M. Cassor, K. Gould.

The score was 17-14 in favor of the Deer Bay international champions.

The score by innings was:
Lakefield .. ..2 2 1 7 2—14
Deer Bay .. ..3 3 4 0 7—17

The tag day on Friday the 18th is for the Public and High School and on Saturday the 19th for the village in general. Lakefield has always given generously to this worthy cause and it is expected that this year's response to this appeal for the unfortunate children of our own county will be no less generous.

QUAKER MOURN LOST PENNANT

Philadelphia Fans Have No Love For the Senators.

Well, that's over! says Stoney McLinn in Tuesday's Philadelphia Ledger. Philadelphia baseball fans may now quit worrying about tickets for the World Series games in Greater Shibe Park this year.

Backed into a corner by the 'high-batting' Senators Wednesday, the Athletics fought with every ounce of courage and determination that was in them. The scores prove this—2-1 in the morning and 7-6 in the afternoon.

In both battles the Macks, trailing in the late innings, staged rallies that had the multitudes yelling and throwing straw hats away and doing all the other things that thrilled baseball crowds do.

Friends, it was not "in the cards" for the A's to win the flag this year. The fates turned against them in both games. At that, we offer no alibis. The better team won.

Labor Day will always be remembered by the baseball fans of Philadelphia. It saw the shattering of our hopes. But our hopes were as fragile as china and easily shattered.

If any person has evidence concerning a worse slump by a team that was a snappy pennant contender two-thirds of the way, let's have it.

Oh, What Can Happen in a Month!

On Saturday, August 15, in Boston, when the A's started their slump by losing the second game of a double-header, they were about two games ahead of Washington.

Their double defeat shoved them nine games below the world's champions. All this happened in less than a calendar month—a few days more than three weeks.

From now on the Macks will be kept busy fighting back the teams that are crowding along hoping to get the second-place money. Chicago, St. Louis and Detroit all have No. 2 rung hopes.

The A's were enthusiastically supported by the two great crowds — 28,000 in the morning and 36,000 in the afternoon. The fans were with them until the final out was recorded in both games.

Furthermore, the cash customers were loudly and manifestly opposed to the Senators, especially the boy boss, Bucky Harris, and several of his stars who have been wearing the "high hat."

Washington supporters, who came to Philadelphia with the team, were wondering why the tart razzberry was so plentifully showered upon the team, and why Bucky Harris got more than his share.

Presumably, the Philadelphia fans had read something about the alleged protest of the Washington club against Jack Quinn's acquisition by the A's. This in face of that queer transaction which gave the Senators Severeid.

Throughout the season there has been evidence of what had all the earmarks of poor sportsmanship down Washington way. This was chargeable to the management. Bucky Harris is of the management.

Last year's glorious triumph produced a desire on the part of the Washington club to win a second pennant no matter how they did it. That's why Philadelphia cannot freely give three long cheers for Bucky Harris and his hired men this year.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 10. — Canadian Press. — Tomlin held the Reading Keys to four scattered hits this afternoon and as the Grays hit Wilson hard and at opportune moments, Providence won the first game of the series by a score of 6 to 1. The score:

Reading .. ..1000000—1 4 -
Providence .. ..20000121x—6 10 1
Wilson and O'Neill; Tomlin and Lynn.

UPSETS PUZZLE FOOTBALL FANS IN OLD COUNTRY

Londoners Pin Faith to Tottenham With Four Straight Wins.

SATURDAY GAMES

West Ham Have Begun Auspiciously—At Home to Burnley.

LONDON, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press Cable).—With English League football now in its second week, followers of the game continue puzzled at the remarkable upsets of form that have featured the game already played and there are few indeed to be found who will hazard any guesses based on past performances on the contests scheduled for Saturday. Londoners continue to pin their faith to the 'Spurs and point to the fact of Tottenham's four straight wins as indicative of the metropolis being in a favored position for this season's honors. Already the 'Spurs have exhausted their fixtures with one of the teams in the league, Sheffield United, the cup holders, whom they defeated in both a home and an away game, and on each occasion by the score of three goals to two. On Saturday the 'Spurs travel north to Lancashire and play Everton. This opposition is not calculated to worry the metropolitans a great deal unless Everton has been able within the last few days to develop a considerable improvement in their game. Three drawn encounters and one defeat constitute Everton's record, and when placed beside that of Tottenham it looks unimpressive. The element of surprise is strong however, and that is a factor that must be taken into account.

Two London Games.

The games are scheduled for the London area in the First Division, West Ham playing Burnley at Upton Park, and the Arsenal entertaining Liverpool at Highbury. The Hammers have begun their season with great promise, having won three of their four games and drawing the other. The draw was obtained against Liverpool away from home last Saturday. This compares with one win, a loss and two draws registered by Burnley.

In the Midlands, a stirring contest is promised in the encounter at Villa Park between Newcastle United and Aston Villa. The remarkable vicissitudes of both these clubs furnish an outstanding feature of the early season's game. The Villa, after crushing Burnley, seemed to relapse, for in their next game they went down rather hard to Manchester United and followed this up by splitting points with Leeds. A return game with Manchester United saw the Old Trafford club draw, two goals each. With regard to Newcastle, they continued in mediocre fashion until they collapsed Wednesday before Blackburn Rovers. Playing at home they were utterly crushed by the Lancastrians, seven goals to one. Incidentally this rout was the first victory for Blackburn this season. But Newcastle United and Aston Villa seem to play a game all their own and despite the somewhat indifferent showing of the two teams, their contest will be replete with interest.

Champions at Home.

The League champions, Huddersfield Town, are hosts to Cardiff City, and in no sense could it be said that the cup finalists constitute any threat to the Yorkshiremen. In their four games, the Welshmen have emerged winners only once, when they defeated Everton at Cardiff a week ago. One the other hand, following an initial draw with West Bromwich Albion, the champions have gone straight ahead and in turn have disposed of Sheffield United and Bury. Huddersfield's fans profess no anxiety as to the outcome.

Sunderland, who were deprived of league leadership on Monday by Tottenham, have an opportunity of adding to their trio of victories on Saturday when they receive Sheffield United as their guests. The northeastern club have already established a reputation for heavy scoring, fourteen tallies having been hung up in three games as against eight for the United. It is a case of the near leaders facing the near tail-enders, for the United's only point was their initial draw with Everton. Since then, they have lost twice to the 'Spurs and once to Huddersfield, as already indicated. Whether the Blades are content to plough along in that matter or not is another thing.

Other scheduled encounters are: West Bromwich at Blackburn; Birmingham at Bury; Leeds United at Leicester; Manchester United vs. Manchester City, on latter's ground; Bolton at Notts County.

SOCCER NOTES.

Saturday's soccer bill includes two important games in both senior and junior circles.

The old rivals, the Quaker Oats meet the Canadian Woollens, in a league match at Nicholls Oval, on Saturday afternoon. Kick-off at three o'clock. Referee, Alex. McKinley. In precious encounters these two elevens have given very good football, and well worth watching, because it never lacked interest until the final whistle.

Down on King Edward Park the fast aggregation, the C.P.C., meet the Masseys in the Charity Cup tie, at three o'clock. This is sure to be a hard game as all the boys are out to win.

Each day over five thousand tons of newsprint paper is produced in Canada.

THREE SUCCESSIVE HOME RUNS IN ONE INNING RARE FEAT BY YANK SLUGGERS

Accomplished in Majors Only Four Others Times, And Not Since 1902—Bob Meusel, Ruth and Gehrig Clouted Sam Gray.

PHILADELPHIA, September 11.—(Canadian Press). —Three Yankee Musketeers, Bob Muesel, Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, yesterday accomplished feat phenomenal in baseball—that of hitting successive home runs in a single inning.

The record books reveal that the trick has been turned on four previous occasions in the major leagues, but not since 1902. In previous occasions in the major leagues, but not since 1902. In that year, within a span of 28 days, three successive home runs were clouted by batters in two different games.

The Yankee slammers did their hitting in the fourth inning of Thursday's game with the pennant battling Athletics at Shibe Park. Connie Mack's prize pitcher, Sam Gray, was on the mound.

As a sidelight to the performance, Ruth got another homer—his 18th—in the second game.

TILDEN AND JOHNSTON REPULSE TENNIS THREAT OF FRENCHMEN

Jean Borotra Force American Ace to Five-Set Thrilling Battle.

DAVIS CUP SINGLES

PHILADELPHIA Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—The United States emerged triumphant yesterday from the opening two matches for the Davis Cup, but only after France, making her first challenge for this emblem of international tennis supremacy had given the defenders a spectacular and thrilling struggle.

Jean Borotra, the whirling Dervish of the courts, came close to giving his country undreamed of tennis glory when he forced William T. Tilden, the United States champion, to a sensational five-set battle before yielding by scores of 4-6, 6-0, 2-6, 9-7, 6-4, while his countryman, Rene Lacoste, rallying on the brink of crushing defeat, carried William M. Johnston to another stirring finish before losting at 6-1 6-1, 6-8, 6-3.

Not in six years of victorious Davis Cup play has the United States been carried to any more strenuous fight than she had Thursday in turning back the gallant challenge of these young sons of France. Theirs was the real glory of the day, even in defeat, for in a single afternoon they came close to achieving what was looked upon as the tennis impossible.

Spectacular Tennis.

They played with a reckless, spectacular dash that would have broken probably any defence but that of the two "Bills," veterans of many a hard and testing campaign.

Borotra's heroic fight for victory over Tilden was the high spot of the day, and when he finally went down to defeat in a nerve-wracking, exhausting two hour struggle, France's real hopes went with him. What chances the challengers really had were carried in the magic racquet of this inspired star, whose play almost single-handed had accomplished the defeat of Australia in the inter-zone finals over last week-end.

Hopeless Prospect.

The Basque's downfall, followed by Lacoste's setback, left France with a virtually hopeless prospect of triumph and United States with a commanding lead. Victory in only one of the remaining three matches will clinch the cup for this country, while France must sweep all three to gain the crown.

Today, in the double, the defenders will pin hope on the remaining two stars of their team—R. Norris Williams, the captain, and Vincent Richards. They will face Borotra and Lacoste, who must win to prolong the decision until Saturday, when Tilden is slated to face Lacoste, and Johnston to oppose Borotra in the concluding singles matches.

GENE TUNNEY SIGNED TO MEET MADDEN

It is said that Captain W. X. Fawcett, the promoter, is paying a purse of $20,000 for the match, $12,000 of which will go to Tunney.

INSIDE GOLF.

By CHESTER HORTON

Maker of 61 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

In the back swing it is a difficult matter consciously to try to tighten up the grip as the swing progresses. This is almost certain to lead to too much gripping near the top of the back swing, at which point the grip really loosens some when the swing takes a natural pace. A fine rule is this: See to it in the address that the palm of the right hand presses rather firmly against the thumb of the left hand and at the same time have a firm grip with thumb and forefinger of each hand. Then let the back swing go. The grip wil automatically tighten some as the club is swung back, and at the top—just at the turn—the right hand will automatically loosen from the left hand a little, but it will pick up its original contact again as the forward swing progresses. Then, at the moment of impact you will have a firm, unyielding grip.

ST. LOUIS, September 10. Canadian Press. — Supporting Aldridge's brilliant pitching with timely hitting and sterling fielding, the league leading Pittsburgh Pirates defeated St. Louis 9 to 5. CHANNEL SWIMMERS SUFFER UNTOLD AGONIES AS FAILURE COMES TO MOCK THEIR EFFORTS

GOAL IN SIGHT

Mlle. Sion Was Maddened by Smell of Food on Attending Boats.

By Sidney .Williams.
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, Sept. 11. — (United Press).— The last bitter moments of a swimmer's struggle to conquer the English Channel form an ordeal terrible to behold.

Picture a gasping, benumbed man or woman—who has expended his or her last ounce of energy; chilled to the bone; fatigued into semiconsciousness, bruised from buffeting waves; fighting to reach the white chalk cliffs of Dover and win the greatest victory a swimmer can accomplish.

Failure is followed by an awful quarter of an hour.

Powerful men like Wolffe and Burgess have been known to sink and were only rescued with utmost difficulty from drowning.

I saw Colonel "Tiny" Freyberg—he is a six-footer and weighs over 180 pounds—vainly trying to reach the cliffs between Dover and Deal, only a mere five hundred yards away during the closing minutes when he had swum seventeen hours through a long, chilly night.

His face was spent and drawn. His body was like raw meat from the buffeting it had received from the sea. One eye was badly swollen. He was semi-conscious, but his will was indomitable. Sporadically, he would rouse himself and battle anew with the ever-increasing force of the ebb-tide.

Began to Moan.

He began to moan. We on the escorting tug could barely force ourselves to look at his struggles. Scars left from his numerable war wounds showed up vividly through the patches of grease still clinging to his body.

No one spoke excepting Mrs. Freyberg. For minutes on end she encouraged her husband with every whim and artifice she could bring into play. All to no avail. The Channel was gradually beating off another heroic effort.

Finally complete exhaustion overcame Freyberg's will-power. He began to sink. Swimmers on the tug and in the sea rushed to his aid. Willing arms were thrown round him and he was carried to the rowing boat alongside the tug.

Freyberg was helpless to aid himself. He lay like a log in his rescuer arms. It was many minutes before his wife and trainer could envelop him in hot blankets, and lay him beside the smoke-stack to warm up

A gallant attempt but the grey, grim Channel had won out again.

Swimmers who have been in the water for many hours are very susceptible to small influences.

When I climbed aboard the tug escorting Freyberg, Mrs. Freyberg rushed to me and asked me if I would kindly remove my hat and ruffle my hair.

She explained that if her husband spotted me from the water looking fresh and alert, it would be enough to discourage him from continuing the attempt.

Mademoiselle Sion, the forty-five-year-old French swimmer, whose recent magnificent failure only a mile and a quarter from Dover, will live in the history of women's attempts suffered untold agonies when the cook of the tug escorting her was preparing breakfast for those on board.

Mademoiselle Sion had only one meal since she entered the water shortly after eight the previous evening. Seven hours of a semmingly endless night had passed since she had tasted food. The smell of the meal under preparation reached her.

Last Tragic Hours.

Vital hunger assailed her. She tried all she knew to escape from the smell. She begged for food. Only hot beef-tea could be given her. She struggled on. The swim was entering its last tragic hours.

One of the main contributory factorsof her failure can be put down to the physical agonies she endured when hunger assailed her during the early hours of the morning

Dover boatmen, who have spent a lifetime on the waterfront, are without doubt the finest judges as to whether a swimmer will be successfulor not.

Never once have I known them to go wrong

The old "salt" who took me in his motor-launch to Freyberg's tug, predicted the failure of the Colonel. He asserted that Freyberg was too far from the English coast at that particular time to be able to be encountered later.

He also predicted to within four hundred yards the point where Freyberg would abandon. He was controversial to Freyberg's trainer, but he was right.

Dover boatmen idolize anybody who makes the attempt. They assert that it is one of the biggest human endurance feats imaginable

They are right .

APPLICANTS GIVE QUEER ANSWERS TO TEST QUERIES

Q.—Why Does a Motor Truck Fail to Start When It Is Cranked?

A.—DRIVER TOO WEAK

Student Would Put Tourniquet on Neck of Man With Bleeding Head.

LOS ANGELES, September 10. — (Associated Press.) — Ingenious reasoning may at times serve in the absence of accurate information but it is not always a safe substitute. This was the generalization formulated by Carl V. King, secretary of the Los Angeles civil service board, after going over the examination papers of a class of candidates recently seeking municipal employment.

"What is a labor distribution sheet?" was one question. A candidate evidently relying upon his reasoning faculty rather than knowledge replied: "One that is edited by the laboring class in the form of a newspaper and is distributed for the purpose of keeping their fellowmen enthusiastic."

To the question, "What is arson?" another candidate answered: "The act of trying to poison a person with arsenic."

Other questions and answers were:

Q. What is a morgue

A. piece of paper held against property for borrowed money.

Q. What does habeas corpus mean?

A. The red corpuscles in the blood.

Q. What is a kleptomaniac?

A. A person with a mania causing him to lie unnecessarily.

What is a moroon?

A. A man who has more than one wife.

Answers found in the examination papers of another class revealed that the motor truck still holds mysteries for some, even in this mechanical age.

"What causes heavy black smoke to come out of the exhaust pipe of a truck?" the class was asked.

"It is the only place it can come out," replied a candidate.

"What is the purpose of a fan on a motor truck?' was another question.

"To supply fresh air to the carburetor," was one answer.

"Give a reason why a motor truck fails to start when cranked," directed the examiner.

"A motor truck will sometimes fail to start if the driver is too weak to crank it," answered one job seeker.

"If you found a man with a severe cut on the head that was bleeding freely, what would you do?" another class was asked.

"I would put a turniquet on his neck," announced one studest of first aid.

PRIMATE ADVOCATES SUNDAY PROHIBITION

Archbishop O'Donnell Denounces Evasion of Sunday Liquor Laws.

DUBLIN, Sept. 11.—(Associated Press.)—Archbishop O'Donnell, Primate of all Ireland, has denounced the evasion which the difference between the drink laws in Northern Ireland and the Free State permits. The North has wholly abolished Sunday drinking. The South mountains an exemption in favor of the bona fide traveler.

Omeath in County Louth in the Free State is half a mile of water across the border from Northern Ireland, and on Sundays large numbers of Northern excursionists go there to avail themselves of the privilege of Sunday drinking granted in the Free State.

"Drunkenness is not the only evil which these unworthy members of society exhibit," says the archbishop. "They have also brought with them the practice of dancing degraded dances from which decent paganism would recoil, and they are quite unabashed in desiring further facilities for drink and dancing in juxtaposition." He advocates the closing of public houses on Sunday altogether.

THEATRES

AT THE ROYAL.

DENNY ADDS ANOTHER TO HIS TRIUMPH LIST.

Wilson's "Oh, Doctor!" Is Excellent Vehicle on Screen.

Reginald Denny has added another triumph to the list of his screen achievements by his work as star in "Oh, Doctor!" Universal-Jewel, which was given its first showing yesterday in the Royal Theatre.

But the public who has acclaimed, not only his humorous personations, but his rapid-action recklessness, is due for a shock when he is introduced as an invalid whose principal activities consist in taking his own temperature with a clinical thermometer and drawing the stoppers from various bottles containing nostrums guaranteed to cure, no matter what the ailment. "Oh, Doctor!" is the screen version of the famous story of the same name written by Harrry Leon Wilson, and Denny has the part of Rufus Billups, Jr.

Denny's characterization of this young hypochondriac is one of the best things he has ever done. It is a part that might easily have been overdone, and that would have ruined the picture; one is forced to the conviction that the big star must have devoted considerable time to studying the peculiarities of the hypochondriac.

The best opportunity for Denny to emphasize his subtlity of character portrayal comes when, having fallen in love with his beautiful nurse, portrayed by Mary Astor, he battles with himself to overcome his obsession regarding his own health and to act like a normal human being.

He succeeds and then, spurred to great endeavor by his desire to become like the heroes of the novels she reads, he enters into a series of adventure that almost cause heart-failures to his aunt, his nurse and the three Shylocks who have loaned him money.

In this latter part of the story it is the Denny of "Sporting Youth" and other vigorous action pictures that is on the screen.

"Oh, Doctor!" was directed by Harry Pollard, and he achieved something worth while, as he has in the other Dennys which he has directed. The supporting cast is a fine one and includes such widely known screen players as Otis Harlan, Willian Mong, Tom Ricketts, Lucille Ward, Mike Donlin, Clarence Geldert, Blanche Payson, George Kuwa, Martha Mattox and Helen Lynch.

"LADY ROBINHOOD" COMING.

Athrill with the romance of old Spain and a band of patriotic carbineers led by an intrepid girl who operates from ther mountain fastnesses above where the Pyranees meet the blue sea, "Lady Robinhood" comes to the Royal Theatre for a three-day run on Monday, with Evelyn Brentin the stellar role. In portraying "Lady Robinhood," Miss Brent departs momentarily from the groove of crook melodramas in which she has been such a pronounced success; and the departure is by way of being an added triumph for the little star. No more colorful role could have been devised than that of the charming, alluring, fiery, fearless little patriot who leads her oppressed people to justice, despite the double crossing of her trusted lieutenants, and who eventually falls in love with the rich and bored young American whom she has kidnapped from his yacht. This vivid and powerful story is an adaptation by Tom Hopkins of an original written by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins. The direction is as excellent as that which Miss Brent has been fortunate enough to enjoy in her last few releases, and the cast is entirely adequate.

AT THE CAPITOL

"THE TEN COMMANDMENTS"

Another epic drama of the silver sheet opened at the Capitol Theatre yesterday in the showing of Cecil B. DeMille's mighty spectacular production, "The Ten Commandments," and an appreciative audience watched the unfolding last night of one of those tremendous efforts of the screen, when its limitations with regard to size and space and speech are remembered, which bring to the realization more clearly than possibly years of reading or consideration of pictorial histories could do, the ways and manners and tribulations of bygone days. To get a real, vivid glimpse into the customs and peoples of the times when the world was young, nothing can surpass productions such as these. Exhaustive research and delving into musty records must precede the production of such wonderful pictures.

The first portion of the picture deals with the life of the captive Israelites, in the days of the Exodus from Egypt, and the last section is a distinctly modern counterpart of the sins of Mosaic times, with modern men and women re-enacting the dramas staged on Egyptian desert sands.

There is a moral to the picture, but it is not permitted to interefere with the beauty and magnificence of the screening. The theme of the leper, the "unclean" creature, contaminating all with whom she comes in contact, runs through both stories and the inevitable doom of the wrongdoer is exemplified in the fate that awaits the gorgeous Rameses, Pharaoh of Egypt, and his modern prototype alike. "If you break the Ten Commandments, they will break you" is the theme of the picture. The pride of the Egyptian monarch and the pride of the youthful flouter of religious teachings is broken by the wrath of the Lord.

There is a notable cast, including such well-known screen names as Theodore Roberts, the "grand old man of the screen" who portrays the patriarchal figure of Moses, standing in the thunder of tempest and the fury of the lightning on the mountainside to receive from the hand of the Lord the Commandments he has laid upon his people, Estelle Taylor, as Miriam, the lovely sister of Moses, going through the travail of the Egyptian days, when the wheels of the Pharaoh grind into the dust the bodies of the captives; Charles de Roche, a superb figure as Rameses the Magnificent, refusing to listen to the words of the Lord'sprophet; and Agnes Ayres, the outcast leper, healed by the touch of Christ. In the modern section, Rod le Rocque is the wayward son, turning from the religious teachings of his mother and laughing at the Ten Commandments; Richard Dix is the thoughtful elder son; Leatrice Joy is the heroine; Mary Leigh, and Iita Nadi is the half-caste adventuress, helping to bring to his ruin the reckless youth who laughs his way through to a final downfall.

There is a magnificent series of scenes in the Biblical portion of the story, with a tremendous effort in the chariot race of the Egyptions, colored effectively, and the marvellous effect achieved in the presentation of the miracle which divided the Red Sea for the Israelites and then swallowed up the pursuing hosts. A brilliant bit, too, in the modern section, is the collapse of the church, which has been erected on unsafe foundations by the grafting builder, and the final scene in which the wayward son loses his life in stormy waters.

It is one of those massive pictures which almost defy adequate description, and must be seen to have its full worth realized. It affords, as nothing else can quite do, a realistic picture of the drama of life, its sins and passions and desires, as it was in the beginning of time, and as it is today. Biblical scholars will enjoy the first portion, and excitement-seekers revel in both. With it, there is a musical score that adds immensely to the interest of the production.—Jeanette.

AT THE GRAND

WHITE CARGO

White Cargo, a drama of the primitive, which was played by a brilliant company of actors at the Grand Opera house last evening, is one of the foremost examples of the realistic school of playwriting. For over two hours it held a large and critical audience spellbound as the tale of a soul-stirring tragedy was unfolded. It is not a parlor drama, but it is so realistic, it is so palpably a vivisection of West Coast life that it rings with that true tone that only realism can sound. It lacks the vulgarities of Rain, and is devoid of the wishy washy love element in the Bird of Paradise, but it hacks out a niche all for itself in the hall of fame.

Briefly, the plot is that a young man comes out from England, spic and span, the veritable clothing advertisement. He is going to be different. He will shave every day, keep the premises neat, drink sparingly, and, above all, leave the women alone. This he announces amid the grating guffaws of Witzel, who has been there seven years. In eight months he has got unkempt and dirty, and inside of a year he has married the native woman, who has lived at one time or other with most of the men on the coast. The last act shows his passion turned to revulsion, and the woman, in her turn, seeking a new mate. She poisons him, and he goes home in a stretcher—"white cargo."

It is impossible to see the show without being permeated with the pitiless heat and the all-pervading rot. Before one's very eyes Africa and the white man do battle, with the dark continent coming out victor every time. A rot pervades the air that not only rots the wood, the furniture, the picture wires, but it eats deeper into the very souls of men and leaves them nothing but derelict carcasses of lust. Well was the original book named Hell's Playground.

Unlike many examples of theatrical realism, however, White Cargo is a consistent as well as an entertaining drama. The characters are skillfully drawn, and in most cases the exacting roles are cleverly interpreted. The objectionable part of most of the realistic plays is that they are devised with the sole purpose in view of shocking the audience. The author invariably strives for the sensational, with the result that logic and often dramatic construction are ignored.

The author of White Cargo has drawn ten characters—nine men and a woman—and even to the smallest part the utmost care in writing has been exercised. Tondeleyo remains true to her type to the end, instead of blossoming forth in the last act as a sweet little ingenue; the lovable old rum-soaked doctor at the final curtain does not sign the pledge, but finishes off a "spot" of whisky. Witzel, the dominating character, remains the same cynical, irritable individual to the last.

Once in a lifetime a person is entitled to have at least one real hilarious round of laughter, and that is the opportunity which the theatre-going public of Peterboro is going to get on Saturday, Sept. 12, when Mr. Francis Compton presents the riotous farce comedy "A Little Bit of Fluff" at the Grand Theatre.

To say that this is a comedy, is putting it mildly as there is one continuous roar of laughter from beginning to end. A very excellent cast supports Mr. Compton, who is just returning from a long trip to the coast where he played to capacity houses. Popular prices prevail and seats will be on sale at Opera House on Thursday, Sept. 10.

Special matinee on Saturday.

THE ORIGINALS IN "THUMBS UP."

Record Breaking New Revue, "Thumbs Up."

Canada's now famous and well beloved soldier revue, "The Originals," will be seen here at the Grand Opera House, on Monday and Tuesday, September 14-15, in their very latest annual production, "Thumbs Up," which for genuine fun, laughter and enjoyment is guaranteed to have everything in the revue line completely eclipsed.

All new and many of the best songs and music from England, have been embodied in the new revue which sparkles and scintillates with quips, all the latest wit, humor and patter, combining in all to make a production of laugh-provoking entertainment such as has not been equalled by them in any of their former revues. In other words, "Thumbs Up," is just a trifle better.

Amongst the cast will be the favorites, Gene Pearson, Bob Anderson, Alan Murray, Jerry Brayford, Bertram Langley, Thomas Dunn, Lionel Broadway and H. P. Campbell, who has been the business manager of the Originals in seasons past and has not graced the footlights since the old days in France.

Jimmy Goode, the prince of black face comedians, is back with the Originals this year after a season off the stage. Another new member of the cast is Stuart Callahan, who is said to excel in the art of terpsichore.

No pains or expense have been spared to make the latest revue a better one than any of its predecessors, and all in all the ORIGINALS have an entertainment to offer their many friends from coast to coast second to none, and better than anything given before.

MATTERHORN HAS SCARED VILLAGERS

Landslides and New Crevices Give Cause for Worry.

ZERMATT, Switzerland, Sept. 11.—Peculiar actions on the part of Matterhorn, one of the lofty peaks of the Alps, recently caused the evacuation of their places by the inhabitants of the mountain slopes. A series of landslides were followed by the appearance of broad and deep crevices the mountain side causing considerable worry and fear to the people.

Appeals for help were sent to the nearest Swiss towns and to Turin, Italy. The authorities ordered all the villagers to vacate their places and go to Breil. Soldiers were rushed to the district and were obliged to use forceful measures to get some of the inhabitants to leave and take their cattle with them.

A number of engineers and a detachment of Alpine troops have been quartered in the vacated villages to await developments

Inglorious End of the "Shenandoah."

CALDWELL, Ohio, Sept. 11.—The mangled aluminum frame of the dirigible Shenandoah may be sold for 20 cents a pound.

Commander Jacob Klein, chief of the inquiry which investigated the disaster near here, said the Aluminum Company of America, Pittsburgh, Pa., the highest bidder, had offered that amount.

Commander Klein asked bids for 50,000 pounds of junk, a composition of aluminum, copper and manganese, formerly the "Daughter of the Stars."

EXHIBITION NOTES.

Roland Denne, president of the Exhibition Board, intimated to the Examiner this morning that there must be no parking of cars on the south side of Lansdowne avenue throughout the space taken up by the grounds fence.

It was noted at the auto races that a great crowd viewed the thrilling contests from vantage points on automobile roofs and hoods, and it is with a view to eliminating this practice that the parking restrictions will be placed upon the area specified. A police officer will be on duty to enforce this pronouncement.

Mr. Denne further said that all motorists desirious of entering their cars in the grounds must do so through the Lock street entrance as that on George street will be devoted solely to pedestrian custom.

Janitors Health Was Destroyed by Attack of Virulent Weed.

ILL LONG TIME

BOSTON, Sept. 11.— (United Press).—The Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board authorized a workmen's conpensation award of $3,800 to the widow of an employee of the town of Adams, who died indirectly as the result of ivy poisoning, received in performance of duty.

Before becoming afflicted with the poison ivy, the man, a janitor, was apparently in good health. The poison generally disrupted his health, however, induced a loss of appetite and a loss in weight of twenty pounds. A chronic condition of cirrhosis of the liver was aggravated. Death was attributed to the general condition produced by the ivy.

FACTS ABOUT OPTOMETRY
The Prevalence Of Far-Sight
It is the opinion of Optometrists that this error of vision is more often met with than any other. And in addition to being so prevalent, it is very detrimental. It is present in all ages, the majority of children being to some extent far-sighted. There is but one way to correct far-sight—placing glasses before the eyes that remove the error. We have success in such cases.

Belleville Hails Trio King, Gordon, Hanna In Big Rally of Party

PARTY HAS FAITH IN CANADA.

Hon. G. N. Gordon Stands Up For King's Administration of Canadian National Railway—Recalls Hanna's Victory and Predicts a Repetition Next Month.

(By a Staff Reporter)

BELLEVILLE, Sept. 12—A parade with 100 autos in line, six brass bands supplying stirring music, the streets along the route lined with spectators, were the means adopted by Belleville and the remainder of the riding of South Hastings to give expression to its welcome of the two distinguished visitors yesterday, Premier McKenize King and Hon. G. N. Gordon, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, in the reconstructed Federal Cabinet. The affair had been staged by Charles Hanna, who not quite a year ago won national fame when he carried that riding for the Liberals in a by-election after it had been a Conservative stronghold for the past 24 years. "Charlie's picnic" it was popularly alled and about 90 per cent. of the men and women in the crowd wore badges which carried inscriptions denoting their fidelity to their member. The heartiness of the reception given the political trio was equally distributed without favor and each was heartily cheered every time he rose to speak or whenever his name was mentioned. Mr. Gordon's name is familiar in Belleville and in Hastings County but yesterday he added to his popularity in that section of Ontario and established his reputation as an effective platform speaker, sharing the honors in this regard with his political leader.

Old Fashioned Picnic

The picnic proper, an old fashioned function to which everybody brought baskets and joined in a community lunch, began early in the forenoon, the programme being baseball games and other athletic sports, with Charlie Hanna as the master of ceremonies. The parade left the market square at 1.30 for the fair grounds and the speaking started soon afterwards. A stand for the speakers had been built on the race track in front of the grand stand so that the spectators had an excellent chance to hear and see. On the fence in front of the grand stand were two streamers one bearing the inscription "King will carry the country as he has carried the Commons" and on the other were the words, "The tide of prosperity is turning toward Canada as after 1896."

Mayor of Trenton Presides

William Fraser, Mayor of Trenton, who was recently elected president of the South Hastings Liberal Association, was chairman. In his opening remarks he welcomed the visitors and lauded Mr. Hanna who, he said, is the most popular member of the House of Commons ever sent from the riding.

"He won a year ago and he will win again on the 29th of October," declared Mr. Fraser in conclusion.

Bouquets for Premier

When Premier King arose to speak, he was halted by the chairman who invited Miss Anna Hurley, vice president of the Women's Liberal Club of Belleville and South Hastings, to a place close to the speakers' table. Miss Hurley read a graceful complimentary address to Premier King, assuring him that he had the esteem and confidence of the members of the organization which she representd and pledging their undivided support in the coming election.

A small girl and a boy also of tender years then emerged from the crowd each carrying a huge bouquet of roses which they presented to the Premier, who acknowledged the address and the floral tributes in graceful terms. Some one in the audience called for three cheers for Premier King, and these were given with a will, the crowds seated in the grand stand rising to their feet.

CHARLES HANNA, M.P.
Liberal member for East Hastings, engages in second political fight within year, having vanquished E. Gus Porter in the bye-election. Yesterday at the Liberal picnic at Belleville, he shared with Premier King the enthusiastic greetings of a crowd of 4,000.

Jumble Of Dead Languages In Wireless Receiver Is Result Of British Scientist's Secrecy Device

LONDON, Sept. 12 (Special by United Press).—Dr. A. M. Low, British scientist, claims to have invented a device for securing secrecy in wireless transmission better than Marconi's beam system. As explained by Dr. Low today, the message is spoken into the dictaphone with a record turning at very irregular speeds by the use of elliptical gear wheels. The finished record is then made to speak backward into the wireless transmitter.

The effect, it is said, sounds like a mixture of dead languages. The receiving station employs a dictaphone to record this jargon. In this case the record turns at the same speed as the original record by the use of a similar set of gear wheels. When the record is made to reproduce in the ordinary way the message becomes English again.

Dr. Low, who asserts the message in this way is sent at the rate of 1,000 words a minute, said, "The secrecy lies in knowing what particular combination of gear wheels to use on the dictaphone at the receiving station."

Rum Runners Quit Job Because Of U. S. Blockade

LONDON, Sept. 12.—(United Press).—Another rum ship has quit the business of supplying thirsty Americans because of the United States coastguard blockade.

The schooner "General Serrett," which has been off Dover for several days without funds for food, repairs or coal, has been docked at Gravesend to discharge her cargo of 10,000 cases of whiskey to-day.

Shipping men said it was impossible to finance the voyage because of the difficulties rum-runners were having in disposing of their cargoes.

CHINESE CADETS SHOOT OFFICER

"We Are Not the Slaves of Russia," Said Ring Leaders.

OFFICER A RUSSIAN.

HONG KONG, Sept. 12 (United Press.—Mutinous Chinese cadets at Canton turned today upon their Russian officer leader and, firing a volley of shots, riddled his body.

The officer, revolver in hand, had tried to force the cadets to march to Honan after a day of drilling.

On being arrested, the ringleaders of the mutiny said only, "We are not the slaves of Russia."

WEATHER

To add to abundance, another heavy rain fell last night and this forenoon. Up to the on hour it gave a total of .70 of an inch. This brings the total for September already to about three inches—almost double what fell during the whole month of August. Heavy frosts have prevailed over the prairie provinces for several nights, and cooler conditions are now likely here. As usual we escaped the worst of the thunderstorm of last night, to the relief of the over-sensitive and nervous portion of our citizens.—W. P.

MAGRATH NAMED TO FOLLOW BECK ON HYDRO BOARD

New Chairman Heads Canadian Section, Joint Waterways Commission.

MAGUIRE APPOINTED.

Ex-Mayor of Toronto Will Be Representative of Municipalities.

TORONTO, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—The Ontario Government will fill the existing vacancies on the Ontario Electric Power Commission by the appointment of Charles A. Magrath, chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Waterways Commission, to the position of chairman in succession to the late Sir Adam Beck and by the appointment of C. A. Maguire, former Mayor of Toronto, to the position of commissioner, which has been vacant since the resignation of George Ramsden. The selection of these men was announced yesterday afternoon by Premier Ferguson, who stated that the necessary orders-in-council ratifying them in their new position would be passed at once.

Trained Engineer.

The new chairman of the commission is an engineer by training and was drafted for the Ontario Good Roads portfolio by Sir James Whitney. By virtue of his position as Chairman of the Waterways Commission he is intimately acquainted with Hydro problems, and is well connected with both Federal and United States officialdom. He was for some years a Conservative member of the Dominion House. His salary will be $18,000 per year, the same as was paid to the late Sir Adam Beck.

Alfred Maguire's appointment is made as a special representative of the municipalities.

STUDENT DROWNED.

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—J. Marsh, of Knowlton, Que., a four year medical student, lost his life by drowning Friday when bathing with other members of the crew of the S.S. Glencorrie at Morrisburg. After having eaten a hearty breakfast, he jumped overboard while the vessel was lying at the Morrisburg dock and attempted to swim to a pier forty feet away. But before he was able to reach it, he disappeared from view. The body was recovered half an hour later, but resuscitation was found impossible.

SENATE REFORM ONLY PRETENSE MEIGHEN AVERS

Conservative Leader Says Premier King Has Abandoned Senate Policy.

NOT THE ISSUE.

Tariff on Agricultural Products Would Be Raised First By Conservatives.

LEAMINGTON, Sept. 12. — By Canadian Press Staff correspondent. —Senate reform is as old as the policy of farce is to the Liberal party, Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative Leader, told a large audience here yesterday.. Election after election brought forth the same announcement that the Senate must be reformed and that the Liberals would do it. .

"But the only policy which the Government has toward the Senate is to get as many members into it as possible when they are in power."

"Now Mr. King apparently has abandoned his whole policy of Senate reform,' 'continued Mr.. Meighen "All that he proposes to do now, according to the morning papers, is to prevent some senators from growing old." The whole question of Senate reform is raised by the Premier to obscure the real issue which they are called upon to decide."

Mr. King's Government had no solution for the railway situation, Mr. Meighen declared, especially "since the government has run the railway into the financial bog where it at present flounders. "Under a board which was incompetent and inexeprienced, the railway had gone in for financial commitments which should never have been undrtaken "Mr. King charges that I would interfere with the operation of the railway," said Mr .Meighen. "I would not interfere with the management of the railway but I would interfere with its direction to the extent of keeping away from the board advances for capital investment for such unwise purposes."

Loss of Population.

Turning to the immigration problem, Mr. Meighen made sarcastic inference to the charges made by the Premier in North York. Mr. King charged, said the Conservative leader ,that he (Mr. Meighen) was the chief reason for lack of immigrants and plenitude of emigrants from Canada. This was absurb. None of the intending immigrants

ALDERMEN AND BOARD MEET TO DISCUSS SCHOOL

Proposed Addition to Collegiate is Subject of Conference.

FROM ALL ANGLES.

Discussion Covers Need, Cost, Means of Paying, and Room Supplied.

A conference to discuss the proposed addition to the Collegiate Institute, was held last night between the Aldermen and the members of the Board of Education, presided over by Mayor Turner and J. A. McKone, chairman of the board. In addition to the members of the two bodies, there were several members of the advisory vocational committee of the Board, F. P. Gavin, Director of Technical Education of the Department of Education, W.R.L. Blackwell, architect of the addition, H. R. H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute, C. E. Jamieson, head of the Commercial department of the Collegiate, and A. F. Hagerman, head of the City's technical schools.

After the Mayor and Mr. McKone had explained the purpose of the meeting, Mr. Kenner explained the disadvantages at present faced by the teachers and pupils of the Collegiate Institute. In the main school, he said, there are 428 pupils in 11 class rooms, where as the department advises that there should be only 30 in a class. There is no gymnasium, or facilities for domestic science and manual training. The commercial department is housed in a discarded public school, far removed from the main building. This department is overcrowded even more than the main school and some of the pupils had to be sent home until room could be provided. In addition the pupils have not the proper use of the literary society, the library, the athletic life of the school or the cadet corps. Mr. Kenner said that when he became principal in 1908 there were 340 pupils, while now there are 622, and at the present time country pupils cannot be admitted.

Mr. Jamieson concurred in all Mr. Kenner's remarks and added that the building used as a commercial department was not properly heated or ventilated. A. F. Hagerman told of the growth of the evening vocational classes and of the necessity for better facilities for them.

King of Siam Advises His Young Men in England Mixed Marriages With White Women Are Failure

PARIS, Sept. 12 — (United Press).—The King of Siam, according to Banko advices, is declaring a line in the marriages of his subjects. To Siamese students in England he has addressed a letter saying:

"Do not marry Europeans at any cost. We know of numerous cases where our countrymen have taken a white woman as their wives, but we have never heard of any mixed marriages with happy results.

"The social conditions in our country are not those of Europeans, and a young white woman married to a Siamese is often seized with a desire to re-visit her mother country. Do not scorn your countrymen and recall that neither the Siamese nor the English respect a person married out of his own race.

TORNADO CAUSES HEAVY DAMAGE

Swept Along South Bank of St. Lawrence Yesterday Afternoon.

ONE MAN KILLED.

MONTREAL, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—Damage estimated as high as $500,000 was caused by a tornado which swept out of the Ottawa Valley yesterday afternoon and cut a swath about a mile wide along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River. Part of this city was affected, but the chief sufferers were residents of the country towns between Longeuil and Chambly and between St. Bruno and St. Hilaire. There were no casualties in the country districts. One man was killed and three injured in Montreal.

The Baychimo was stated in the report received to be off Herschel Island.

TRAMP TIED UP BOY TO A TREE

Youth of 14 Was Piling Wood in Bush When Seized By Stranger.

RESCUED AT NIGHT.

LINDSAY, Sept. 12 (Special to The Examiner)—The Lindsay police have been asked to keep a lookout for a stranger who has been heading for this town, and who is guilty of attacking and gagging a grandson of Mr. George Will, a farmer, residing in the Township of Thorah, a short distance from Beaverton.

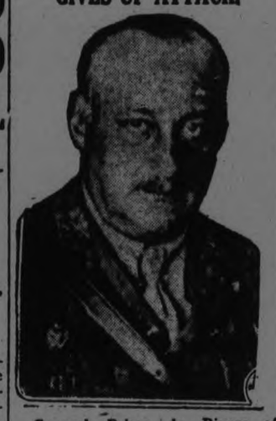
It appears that young Wilson was engaged in piling wood in the bush, when he was suddenly confronted and se d by the tramp, and securely tied up and searched. Not returning to supper, search was instituted for him, and he was discovered tied to a tree and gagged and in a bad way physically. Medical aid had to be summoned for the youth, who is only fourteen years old.

GOUIN WON'T RUN.

Declined Liberal Nomination to Contest Laurier-Outremont Seat.

MONTREAL, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—In a letter read at a special meeting of the Gouin Club last night, Sir Lomer Gouin, former Minister of Justice, declined to run as Liberal candidate in Laurier-Outremont.

GIVES UP ATTACK.



General Primo de Rivera, of Spain, who has been compelled by the battle in Morocco for possession of Tetuan, to renounce his attack on Adjir.

The Riffian forces have been augmented, and only the French attack prevents the tribesmen driving out the Spanish.

Artists, Sculptors, Engravers and Goldsmiths Will Sign Their Works By Using Fingerprints

PARIS, Sept. 12 (Special by United Press).—Henceforward, France means to protect the works of artists, sculptors, engravers and goldsmiths by means of finger prints. The Minister of Public Instruction, who is keenly interested in the question of forgery and reproductions, and knowing of the various projected laws mouldering in the cupboards of Parliament, has taken action himself and is about to institute a system whereby the author of a work of art can take it to the registration bureau, where he will sign a declaration of authorship and make an imprint of his fingers on the declaration and the subject, where the impression will be protected by sealed strips of plaster.

A classified file on photographs will also be kept and the maker of the work in question will be allowed to make any statement he pleases on the registration slip as to the methods used.

It is hoped that his interesting step will be followed by others for the safeguarding of scientific inventions. It is reckoned that the chance of miscarriage by finger prints is less than one in a thousand million.

COST OF COAL TO DEVELOP POWER EQUALS CAPITAL

In Three or Four Years Coal to Replace Morrisburg Would Cost $30,000,000.

NEED IS URGENT.

Statement By Hydro Commissioner Urges Federal Government's Sanction.

TORONTO, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—If Ontario is compelled to develop 300,000 electrical horsepower from steam in default of the authorization of the proposed St. Lawrence River development, the coal cost alone in three or four years will be between $30,000,000 and $45,000,000, or an amount equal to Ontario's share of the capital cost of the Morrisburg plan.

This presentation of the urgency of immediate Federal sanction of the proposed St. Lawrence deevlopment is contained in a statement by Commissioner J. R. Cooke, of the Provincial Hydro-Electric Commission. The statement constitutes an analysis of the power situation at present facing Ontario, and is an urge upon the Ottawa Government to pass upon Ontario's application for authority to develop power at the earliest possible moment.

HAMILTON MAN FINISHED SECOND

COLLAPSED AT END.

LONDON, Sept. 12 — (Canadian Press).—Phil Granville, of Hamilton, Ont., came in second in the London to Brighton road walking race to-day, finishing the 50 odd mile walk eleven minutes after R. H. Baker, of Huddersfield, who did the distance of fifty-one miles seven furlongs and 61 yards in eight hours 16 minutes 16 seconds, five minutes more than the record made in 1909. Granville collapsed at the tape and was carried away by friends.

TRIBESMEN ARE IN RETREAT BEFORE THE FRENCH ATTACKS BUT HARRY SPANISH FORCES

ABD-EL-KRIM LEADS.

Riffians Have Advantage Over Spaniards, But French Hinder Development.

FEZ, French Morocco, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press.)—Amyot, capital of the territory of Beni Zeroual tribesmen, has been captured by the advancing French armies converging on Teroual and Tafrant.

PARIS, Sept. 12 —The Riffians in the south are in full retreat before the new French offensive north from the Ouerkha River, but in the north the Spanish forces, harried by Abd-El-Krim's tribesmen, are in danger of losing their precarious foothold on the Moroccan coast.

If the Spaniards were alone and Abd-El-Krim were not compelled to keep troops facing the French, he would undoubtedly force the Spaniards entirely out of Morocco; but the French drive has gone faster even than was expected.

Twenty-four hours after the French started, their line is farther north than the former line of blockhouses north of the Ouergha which were captured by the Riffians and allied tribes when they made their drive on Fez last Spring.

General Nalin, who commands the whole front, but has been ill in Fez, established headquarters at Taounat, (35 miles northeast of Fez), which the French have been unable to approach for many months. Aster and Sker, abandoned posts north of Toaunat between the valleys of the Sra and Sahela ,tributaries of the Ouerkha, have been occupied, and the troops are already getting into territory where the French have been unable previously to penetrate. The Bibane highland, which was gained and lost a score of times last Spring was surrounded and found to be abandoned by the defenders.

D'Annunzio Burns Incense To Honor Dead At Fiume

GARDONE, Italy, Sept. 12.—(United Press)—Celebrating the sixth anniversary of his march on Fiume, Gabriele D'Annunzio, Italy's warrior-poet, to-day burned on the altar of the war dead, incense, the while performing mystic rites in memory of his dead.

He proposed to fly aboard the dirigible Espera to Fiume to participate in ceremonies there. Meantime at Fiume, the city was decked with flags, patriotic societies' parade and made a pilgrimage to the cemetery where rest some heroes of the venture and to Montenevoso.

To-night the city was to be ablaze with special illuminations.

Strike Of British Seamen Collapses In Home Ports

LONDON, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press). — The unofficial strike of British seamen is dead as far as British home ports are concerned, but still persists in a diminished form in Australia and South Africa. In the ports of these dominions heavier sentences were imposed on more than 100 men Friday, running as high as six weeks' imprisonment, for absences from duty.

At Sydney trade union leaders have asked the Government to intervene to secure a settlement of the strike.

The Flower Show closed last evening at the Armouries with a very fair attendance for the second night, and an interesting programme. The musical portion of the entertainment included choruses by School children, in which nearly eighty scholars, from the Queen Mary, King Edward, King George, Prince Wales and Central Schools took part, the children singing two-part choruses, with accompaniment by Miss E. Morrow. The pupils of the Prince of Wales school also gave two unaccompanied three-part songs. BARN AND CROP ARE DESTROYED

PARTIALLY COVERED.

WARSAW, Sept. 12.—Last night at midnight, lightning struck the barn of William Davis and it was burned completely. The fire entailed the loss of the entire crop which filled it to the peak, and machinery including a hay loader, pea harvester and several small implements which were located in the granary.

One set of sleighs was saved.

The loss was partially covered by insurance. Fortunately there was no stock in the building. There were nearly 100 people at the fire, but the the flames had gained their prey before the assistance could be turned to profit.

Another fire was reported to have been seen farther southward.

MOTOR CYCLE BUMPED WAGON

Driver Was Killed and Passenger in Rear Had Jaw Broken.

WAS NEAR WINDSOR.

ESSEX, Ont., Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—David Irving, aged 23, North Main Street, Plains, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, and John Long, of Kingsville, about 22 years of age, riding tandem on a motorcycle towards Windsor about eight o'clock last night, ran into the rear of a wagon driven by Stephen Farough, of Sandwich South, on the pavement three miles north-west of Essex. Irving, the driver, was thrown against the wagon rack and killed instantly.

Long was thrown off on the side of the pavement and had his jaw broken. He was taken to the Hotel Dieu in Windsor.

$15,000,000 LOST IN RUM RUNNING

English Smugglers 'Go Broke'—Dismayed By U. S. Blockade.

LONDON, England, Sept. 12. — Fifteen million dollars is the estimated loss sustained during the last year by English financiers who sent men down to the seas in ships filled with liquor intended to assuage the thirst of Americans willing and ready to purchase the contraband.

The swift blockaders of the coast guard off the shores of the United States not only have obliterated famous rum row, but also have cut so deeply into the bank rolls of the financiers that they no longer are willing to furnish the money to intrepid skippers who would chance the running of the blockade to put their wet cargoes ashore.

Days of Opulence Past.

Masters and crews of rum-runners are seeking other employment. They aver that their days of opulence have passed and that they are looking for more law-abiding methods to eke out a living.

Since January exports of liquor destined ultimately for the United States have dropped almost 50 per cent. and available figures indicate that liquor exports from Great Britain this year will fall far below the annual 2,000,000 gallons sent out of the country during the last few years.

Exports Show Decrease.

As an instance, for the six months of the present year exports for Canada aggregated only 379,341 gallons, as compared with 1,101,019 gallons in 1924. Consignments to Bermuda and the West Indies, haunts of the rum-runners to the United States, have shown a proportionate decrease. In these two centres at present there are said to be large stocks on hand, but no one is desirous of trying to run the gauntlet of the rum-chasers to put the liquor ashore in American territory.

The loss of a large part of the rum fleet and hundreds of thousands of cases of whiskey apparently has dismayed those persons in England who had hoped to get rich quickly in supplying thirsty Americans with their needs.

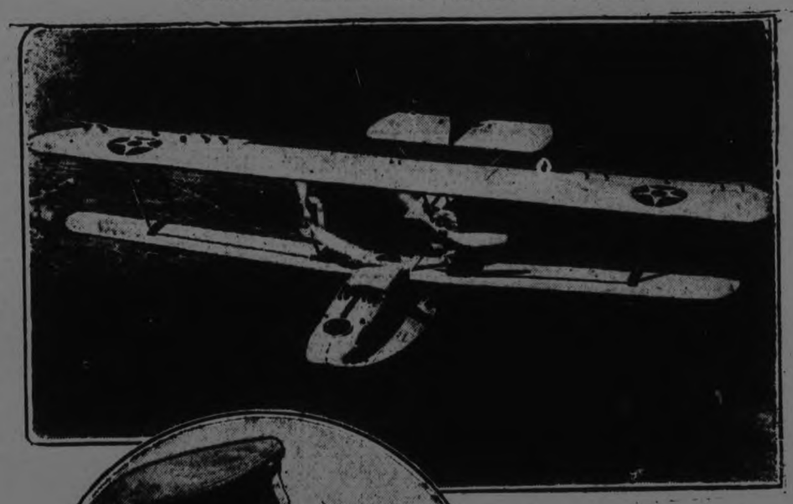
RAISE TOWN 5 FEET.

Work Performed Without Halting Business.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—A remarkable engineering feat has just been completed in the north of England. The whole business section of the town of North-Mich, in Cheshire, has been raised five feet, the task having taken the local engineers three years.

Though the work was spread over an area taking in ten streets, on which are three banks, a county court and 20 shops and houses, it was carried on without stopping business in any way. Shops were lifted while full of customers and drug stores were moved so carefully that not even one bottle was disturbed. The town bridge was raised five feet at each end without disturbing the traffic crossing it.

AEROPLANE AND CREW FOUND



Hard on the heels of the Shenandoah disaster came the report of the loss of the seaplane PN-9 No. 1, shown above. The plane was attempting a flight from San Francisco to Hawaii. It was found, with its crew, on Thursday. Capt. John Rodger, the machine's commander, is shown below.

Bachelor Premier Hints He May Change Estate

When Premier King began his address at Belleville yesterday after being presented with two handsome floral tributes he said that he had come to the city under the impression that he was to attend a political meeting but after receiving such a gift of flowers the affair took on the aspect of a wedding ceremony.

"But," said the Premier, "in the heat of an election campaign there is no time to think of matrimony. However, the wedding ceremony may come in time. When the election is over I hope that some one will have compassion on me and make me as happy as my married friends appear to be."

In the press box there was a discussion as to whether this was to be regarded as an official announcement or merely as a pleasantry and the majority decided in favor of the latter.

CANADIAN OYSTERS SHIPPED TO PARIS

Twenty-two Days in Transport, But Few Rejected.

PARIS, Sept. 11. — (Canadian Press Cable.)—The importation of oysters from Canada has proved successful, according to Prunier, the well known restaurateur of Paris. Last November twenty barrels of oysters were shipped to Paris by a Montreal firm for experimental purposes on the suggestion of Lieut.-Col. Nercule Barre, Canadian Government Trade Commissioner in France, and although the transportation occupied twenty-two days the oysters arrived in comparatively good condition, less than two per cent. being rejected. Ten barrels were consumed in a short time by Prunier's clientele and the balance of the shipment was sent to his oyster parks at Vannes, Brittany, where the oysters were kept in the sea until the present. The oysters have grown considerably and have kept the taste so much appreciated on the American continent.

Owing to the demand which the shipment created for Canadian oysters it is possible that regular importations will be arranged in the near future.

SENATE REFORM

for Canada had even heard his name and the same thing applied to many of the emigrants. The reason for the immigration problem was obvious. People in Canada couldn't find jobs. People intending to come to Canada were aware of this and so they didn't come. The Canadians who were out of work went to the United States.

"I will be the last to go," said Mr. Meighen in passing. "Canada's all right for men even under Mr. King"

The audience laughed.

Tarriff Real Issue.

Then Mr. Meighen turned to the tariff. This was the real issue and the issue which the Government would not face. The Government had failed to face it in the last election.

"Throughout the Province of Quebec denunciation of me rang out," said Mr. Meighen. "They portrayed me as a hangman and they said that the mothers of Quebec would never vote for a man whose hands were dripping with the blood of their sons. That is how they faced the tariff issue in Quebec."

In Ontario, the Maritime Provinces, the West, the Government had varied its tariff time.

"I think there's more than one stock going upto-day because they see the end of the King Government," Mr Meighen continued. Arguments based on increased imports and exports were of little value, he continued. Canada was exporting her raw materials, wood, nickel, asbestos for manufacture in the United States. "We're selling the goods our own people ought to be operating on," he said. The Americans took our raw materials which we sold them for a comparatively small sum, and turned them into manufactured goods worth many times what they had cost.

"Far better to have the price of things raised and have some money to buy them, than to have the low price and no money," Mr. Meighen said. "The policy of a country must be such that you gather into the country the maximum amount of work for the people to do."

The Australian Treaty, Mr Meighen said, had been ratified by both countries but would not go into effect save by an order-in-council passed by this government.

"They have waited some time before passing that order-in-council, I think they'll wait some time yet. They don't want it to go into effect before the election." Mr. Meighen dilated on injury which the treaty would work to the Canadian farmer. Mr. King had virtually opened the Canadian market to the surplus farm products of Australia. Now Australian eggs, dried fruits and other products come into the Canadian market while the Canadian products were practically excluded from Australia.

The first tariff which he would raise if he got into power would be the tariff of agricultural products, Mr. Meighen said. It was absurd that early fruits, etc., should come into Canada without contributing to the revenue. People who could afford to pay for these early fruits could afford to contribute to the revenue, and he gave these people notice that they would have to do it if he was Prime Minister.

J. D. Chaplin, Conservative member for Lincoln, spoke briefly Mr. Meighen left for a night meeting at Amherstburg

SPECIAL PREACHER

Rev. W. E. Fuller, Formerly of Peterboro, at All Saints'.

The special preacher at the Rally Day services at All Saints' Church next Sunday will be the Reverend Wilfred Eastland Fuller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fuller of Stewart Street. He is an old boy of All Saints and attended the Sunday School and was a member of the choir. Taking his course in Theology at Wycliffe College, Toronto, he spent some time in the pioneer missions of the New Ontario diocese of Moosonee. His success there was so brilliant that when an assistant was needed to relieve Canon McKim at St. Luke's Church, St. John, N.B. Mr. Fuller was pressed into the service there. St. Luke's is one of the strongest and most aggressive churches in the Eastern Provinces and it is a high honour to be associated with such an outstanding minister as Canon McKim.

The congregation plan to make the Rally Day services an occasion to welcome home and congratulate an honoured son of the parish and to get a good start on the season's work.

PARTICIPATING IN SPORT.

With the statement of speakers at the annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada that the efforts of the organization should be directed toward getting more players on the field and fewer people in the grandstand, no thoughtful individual will find fault.

We are getting away from the British idea of sport to the American system, which tends to produce experts in every line of athletics.

Thus while the United States is able to boast of world's champion tennis players, golfers, etc., the British Isles can claim a larger percentage of active participants in these pastimes in proportion to population than any other country in the world.

The exploits of individual champions are more spectacular, but in the long run it is participation in healthful recreation by a whole nation that counts the most, and this is undoubtedly what Canada's athletic solons had in mind when they advocated more people on the playing fields and fewer in the stands.

Vicarious exercise in the form of watching experts play games instead of playing them ourselves is a poor substitute for the British plan of getting as many people as possible to actively engage in sport.

The idea advanced at the A. A. U. of C. might profitably be followed up.

OUR TOURIST FRIENDS.

A tourist from the United States was in Peterboro the other day, complaining most bitterly of being charged exorbitant rates at a summer resort hotel.

He may not have been; he perhaps was one of those individuals who are always grumbling about something and would have nothing to say if they didn't grumble.

But assuming that his complaint was justified, it is not difficult to see how much harm to the reputation of the particular locality he had been visiting would be done by this individual on his arrival home.

The incident illustrates something that the Examiner has more than once pointed out, and that may well be stressed again, i.e., that the best advertisement this district can have is to send her army of tourists away well satisfied so that they'll not only come back against themselves but will persuade their friends to come as well.

Certain sections of Europe almost killed the tourist traffic because the theory was adopted that American visitors had so much money that they didn't care how or how much they spent.

The adoption of such a theory in Ontario would be fatal to the reputation of this Province as an ideal summer playground.

As a general rule, the man who has amassed a lot of money has a pretty shrewd idea of the value of it, and he objects to being exploited.

MONEY AT LOWER RATES.

Hon. J. A. Robb has announced a new Canadian loan of $70,000,000, on a 15-year basis at 4 1-2 per cent., to be sold at 97 1-4, so that the yield will be about 4.75 per cent. to the investor, says the London Advertiser. This loan does not mean that the Government is increasing the amount it has borrowed, but it is for the purpose of discharging other maturing loans, among others $42,014,500 issued in 1915 at a rate that cost the Government 5 1-2 per cent. The new loan represents a saving in interest on this of the difference between 5 1-2 per cent. and 4 3-4 per cent., or three-quarters of one per cent., making $315,000 per annum during the life of the loan. The other amounts maturing will be resold at a similar saving in interest.

Although this loan made its appearance only a day ago bankers and brokers are certain that it will be oversold quickly. There is plenty of money in the country and that accounts for the fact that it is available on good security at 4 1-2 to 5 per cent. on an investment that will run for some years. The manner in which Canadian people have absorbed Canadian loans is also evidence of their faith in the security of their own land. True, the loan has the backing of the Government, but back of that must stand the stability and thrift of the country itself, otherwise there would be no such thing as Government security.

Money on a fairly low level may not be a desirable thing for the man who has great sums of it to loan, and who naturally wants to get a high rate for it, but it is a good thing for business development, for building operations and for financing generally. It encourages the carrying out of plans for extension and for opening new fields of trade. The manner in which money is coming forth at 4 3-4 per cent. interest is a distinctly favorable symptom.

. . AND, OF COURSE, YOU DO.

If you want to see the finest exhibits of poultry, livestock, field crops, fruits and vegetables ever shown in Peterboro;

If you want the fun and excitement of the most interesting midway carnival that has been in operation here;

If you are interested in dogs and want a chance to see the finest collection of canines ever gathered together in this city;

If you love the thrill of fast harness horses coming down the stretch in a bunch;

If high-class vaudeville and thrilling acrobatic feats seer your blood;

If the concords of sweet sounds as produced by such a famous organization as Al. Sweet's Singing Band give you pleasure;

If attractive displays of made-in-Peterboro products attract you;

If the noise and animation and thrill of thousands of people in holiday mood impress you;

If you want to meet friends from out of town that you haven't seen in many a moon;

If you want to make Peterboro the home of one of the biggest exhibitions in the country;

If you appreciate the energy and enthusiasm of those associated with its management—

You'll not miss the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition next week.

WHY NOT AT THE EXHIBITION?

The fact that this year's Flower Show, under the auspices of the Peterboro Horticultural Society, failed to reach the standard either in exhibits or attendance that was hoped for should lead the officers of the Society to consider the question of changing the dates, or better still, to have the Flower Show included as part of the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition.

Coming on the eve of the big fair, as it did this year, it failed to attract attention, and as a result was disappointing.

As a department of the Exhibition the Flower Show would be assured a success.

It is certain that the entries would be larger, and that the exhibits would be viewed by thousands of people, as against hundreds under the present arrangement.

The Examiner does not presume to speak for the management of the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition, but has no doubt that the latter would be glad to co-operate with the Horticultural Society and to receive the Flower Show with open arms.

When the 1926 Exhibition season rolls around it would be gratifying to hear that the annual Flower Show had been included as part of Peterboro's big fair, an arrangement that would have better results all round than were possible this season.

The suggestion is made in the hope of being of service to the Horticultural Society, which has done so much to improve the general appearance of Peterboro.

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

Infinite variety is the outstanding rule in nature. In form, structure and coloring, the creatures of the vegetable kingdom—for they are living organisms, with something akin to a soul—present the spectacle of almost unreckonable difference. The assurance of botanists that no two blades of grass are exactly alike is an illustration. So it is in human life. And it is well.

A man died in New York the other day at 83 years of age who had never been inside a theatre. Nor had he ever joined any society or club. Yet he was a normal man in all other respects, and had achieved considerable success as a broker. This is so contrary to the gregarious instincts which move all but the rarest individuals that it has naturally excited comment. What shall be said of such a man? Did he gain by his peculiar isolation from his fellows, or did he lose?

The point of view must determine the answer. To the average individual it must seem that the man who has never been inside a theatre has lost a great deal. On the other hand, since one who has been born blind can never know what light and color are, this odd fellow in New York could not have been conscious of the loss of a thing he knew nothing about. The same observation would apply true of a man or woman who had never read a book, although capable of doing so. It has been written of one Canadian prominent in his day who did much for his country and for Ottawa that he had in his youth read "John Halifax, Gentleman," and enjoyed it so much that he had never read another book for fear he would spoil the fine impression which that masterpiece of Miss Mulock had left in his mind.

Chauncey M. Depew, at 91, told an interviewer that he had never played baseball, tennis or golf in his life. This will seem inexplicable to those who see in him a man of exceptional vitality and also conspicuous for his sociable impulses. If he had carried his confession far enough, it might have been found that he had never played pranks on other boys down at the old swimming hole nor enjoyed the sweetness of a stolen apple. If so, the opinion of the normal youngster of today would be that he has scarcely lived at all. From that conclusion, however, Mr. Depew himself would no doubt dissent.

We get still another glimpse of the variable tastes of human beings, as well as the tendency to exhibit vagaries, when we read that a jazz band was brought down from London to Southampton a week or so ago in order that the learned doctors in attendance at the British Association for the Advancement of Science might dance in the way they liked best. Yet, rightly viewed, there was nothing either extraordinary or unnatural in it. Although exhibiting great unlikeness in many respects, all men have something in common, and that is the disposition to enjoy themselves. In this instance, the savants who were meeting at Southampton simply took the way of getting recreation which appealed most directly to their tastes. Even the New York man who had never been inside a theatre had been for many years a church member.

There is more than the merely whimsical in these observations. The point is that it is as impossible to get all men to choose the same pastimes or habits as it is to get them to think alike. A world-wide discussion is now in progress with respect to orthodoxy, the fundamentalists fighting it out with the modernists; yet we must all suspect that similarity in thinking would be as monotonous and uninteresting as would be a single type of face and form in human beings. The pursuit of happiness is asserted by the American Declaration of Independence to be the inalienable right of every individual; and it no doubt is, within certain obvious limitations. So we must permit men and women to find and do the things which give them satisfaction, each in his and her own way. There would otherwise be no such thing as liberty.—Ottawa Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Let us make it 30,000 in 1925.

The impression seems to be general that Mr. King and Mr. Meighen are finding it difficult to arrive at a mutual opinion about anything.

Peterboro refuses to get excited over the election until the Industrial Exhibition is safely out of the way.

Robert Forke declares that the Progressives will have candidates in every rural riding in the three Prairie Provinces. But he doesn't say how many his party will have east of Winnipeg.

It is a new stunt for a blindfolded man to drive a car around Peterboro's streets. And yet we have plenty of motorists who drive as if they were blindfolded.

Make up your mind to visit the Exhibition three or four times next week. You'll find plenty to entertain you at each visit.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

HIGHER CRITICISM

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir: At the risk of appearing too frequently as a publicist and critic of public affairs in your very indulgent paper will you pardon me if I ask you to publish the following letter from Mr. George Davis head of American missionaries in China. Its purport speaks for itself. Higher criticism is the cult of practically all the evangelical Protestant ministry and in destroying the Old Faith in the Bible and the belief that God takes a driect interest in the affairs of the world. It asserts (really due to disbelief in revelation) the right of the people to deceive both about the here and the hereafter for themselves under ministerial guidance and scolarship with as we see disastrous results to the Old Faith.

J. H. Burnham.

Dear Mr. Burnham,—Please pardon the delay in replying to your query. Yes, higher criticism is having just the same effect in China as here in Canada. It is a world wide disease or "contagion" as one person recently expressed it.

Will greatly appreciate any cooperation you may render in the campaign for giving the Word to China. The Word—and especially getting people to read it for themselves—is one of the best antidotes.

With all best wishes, yours in Him,

George J. B. Davis,
Acts 1:8.

A THOUGHT.

SEPTEMBER WARNS.

August has again passed out and the leaves on the locust and walnut no longer hang lazily like a tideless sea slumbering, for it is now September, the season that suggests so many necessary things.

Even the winds whisper that more work is expected of us or we will be as naked as the branches of a winter tree.

Seasons speak, without words, the understandable truth.

September says, by suggestion, what we should do, and no intelligent person can successfully oppose the will of coming cold weather.

The management may request or may urge us to do more, but September demands that we actually do more.

1. What a wonderful way the Infinite has of inspiring us in industry and teaching us the value of thrift.

Uninterrupted Summer and we would all be a worthless human herd of hunters for pleasure without the stamina to stick to a severe test.

September warns, and the wise go to work.—The Silent Partner.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK.

TORONTO, Sept. 11—There were less than 7,000 cattle on the Union Stock Yards this week and more than a third of them were Western and Ontario feeders. The export classes were fairly represented and Rogers and Maybee collected around 900 head during the week. The supply of butchers cattle was not heavy, but in the good to choice butchers there were too few to accommodate the trade. Again this week there were far too many plain unfinished steers and heifers and these had to be sold at prices below those shipped out as feeders.

For four loads of finished heavy steers the exporters paid $8.35 a cwt. but a load for domestic use was bought by an abattoir at $8.90 a cwt. Export heifers and feeders were easier by 10 to 25 cents a cwt., but bulls maintained a steady average. Few handyweight butchers brought over $6.75 a cwt., but this was due to the absence of quality and finish. Good loads of butchers were $6.25 to $6.40 a cwt., and mediums were $5.25 to $5.75. Common butchers were selling anywhere from $3.25 to $4.50 a cwt.

Butchers' cows commanded a good trade and choice cows stood at $5; good cows were $4 to $4.50, mediums $3.50 to $3.75, and common cows were had around $3 a cwt. More bologna bulls could have been used and the best of these sold from $3.75 to $4 a cwt. The heaviest business of the season was done in stockers and feeders. Western light stockers' heifers and steers sold from $3.75 to $4.50 and were a little firmer. Some breedy loads of the season was done in stockers and $6 to $6.50 a cwt. For the present the receipt of western butchers precludes any possibility of any improvement in prices of Ontario ordinary butchers.

Calves are up again this week about 50 cents a cwt. Four cars were shipped out to Buffalo, and top calves were up to 13 cents. Good calves are selling from 10¼ to 11¼ cents, mediums 8 to 10 cents, and common calves 6 to 7½ cents a pound.

Packers made a cut on lambs of about 75 cents a cwt. from a week ago, and the market for ewes is now 12½ to 12 3-4 cents a pound. Choice sheep are still scarce and are holding steady.

Exports are being made to get hogs down to a closer level with other live stock. For the week the price has been lowered 50 cents a cwt. to $12.50 f.o.b., but the packers are making their objective next week $12 a cwt. f.o.b., and are only bidding $12.25 for Monday's supply.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

WINNIPEG, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—Despite the bearish Canadian Government crop report, issued yesterday, the wheat market here today displayed moderate strength, prices advancing susbstantially. October delivery gained 1 3-8 cents at $1.34 3-8; Novmber 1 1-4 cents at $1.33 7-8; December 1 7-8 cents to $1.31 and May 1 1-4 cents higher at $1.35 1-4.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Sept. 11 (Canadian Prss.—Unexpected firmness of Winnipeg and Liverpool prices in the face of 17,000,000 bushels increase of the official forecast of wheat production in Canada did a good deal to rally the Chicago wheat market today after an early decline. Wheat prices here closed irregular at 1-2c net lower to 5-8c higher, December $1.49 1-2 to $1.49 5-8, and May $1.53 1-8 to $1.53 3-8, with corn 1-8 to 7-8c up; oats showing 1-4 to 1-2c gain, and provisions varying from 12c off to a rise of 10c.

It was only just before the finish that a majority of wheat traders here appeared to have adopted the view that Winnipeg and Liverpool markets had discounted in advance the Canadian Government's revision of crop figures. Throughout most of the day, the Chicago market was under considerable selling pressure both on account of enlargement of the Canadian estimate of yield and because of continued heavy forwarding of Canadian wheat to shipping outlets. Reports of liberal hedging of new wheat at Minneapolis tended further to put a weight on wheat prices here, and so did spreading operations that involved simultaneous selling of wheat against buying of corn. Nevertheless, as the day ender, houses with Winnipeg and eastern connections were actively purchasing all deliveries of wheat here. In some quarters this buying was interpreted as an evening-up process on the part of previous sellers who hesitated to stand out for an additional setback in values after 20 cents decline which had been witnessed in the last month.

Possibilities of greatly enlarged demand from livestock feeders helped to lift the corn market and oats as well. Speculative buying of corn was in evidence. Offerings of corn to arrive here were meagre.

WINNIPEG LIVESTOCK

WINNIPEG, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—Cattle—Receipts 1,125. The market today showed improved activity at firmer prices. All killing classes were in fair demand. Calves remained unchanged.

Hog receipts 254. Packers offered the top price of $12.50 for thick smooths, which represents a decline of about 50 cents from yesterday's closing prices.

The few sales worked on the sheep and lamb market reflected a steady price tone. Supplies were light.

EGG MARKETS

OTTAWA, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press).—The egg market is firm for all grades under a moderate demand for supplies which appear to be well maintained. Reports would indicate very light withdrawals from storage for immediate consumption. The unsettled condition of the United States markets is being reflected to some extent in the principal Canadian markets. Current receipts are showing a disappointing percentage of high grade eggs.

Toronto—Post grade very firm. Jobbing, specials 43, extras 42, firsts 41, seconds 34.

Montreal—Egg market advancing under light receipts. Dealers quoting, extras 39, firsts 35, seconds 29, f.o.b. Ontario points. Poultry market quiet but steady.

CONSTANTLY IMPROVED BUT NO YEARLY MODELS

It has never been the policy of Dodge Brothers (Canada) Limited to build yearly models.

When an improvement is discovered, perfected, tested and found good, it is made at once. The car is always up-to-date.

Moreover, the owner does not have to fear that his Dodge Brothers Motor Car will be made obsolete, shortly after he has bought it, by the announcement of radically new types.

AIRPLANE CREW FLOATED FOUR DAYS ON OCEAN WITHOUT FOOD

Received Radio Messages But Unable to Reply—Honolulu Celebrates.

NEAR EXHAUSTION.

HONOLULU, Sept. 12. — Nine days of terrors behind them, the crew of the seaplane, PN-9 No. 1, was landed at Lihue, on Kauai Island, north-west of Honolulu, shortly before midnight Thursday.

Refusing to leave their craft until it had been tied up, after being towed to Lihue by the submarine R-4, which found them, Commander John Rodgers and his men were taken to a hotel and put to bed.

"They can sleep the clock around if they wish," said Lieut. D. R. Osborne, R., commander of the submarine.

Each of the men was in as good physical condition as could be expected after the hardships they have been through. Their faces were lined and bronzed and they were visibly near exhaustion.

"We saw one merchant ship and glimpsed an airplane," Commander Rodgers said, en route to the hotel. He and his comrades were adrift since September 1, when the PN-9 No. 1 came down while trying to fly from San Francisco to Honolulu.

The wings of the seaplane were badly smashed by the seas, but the hull was intact.

Food Exhausted.

Food and water exhausted on the fifth day after the plane was forced into the sea by lack of fuel. The men, therefore, were without food four for days.

The fabric was torn off the plane while it was being buffeted about at sea and used to catch water when the aircraft was tossed through showers.

"This saved our lives," they said.

Hoard Messages.

The messages radiocast by the searching plane and surface ships were all picked up by the downed seaplane, but it could not put messages on the air in response. This was due to the fact that its drooping antenna was under water.

"We were forced to land the second day out, as you know," a member of the crew said. "We sighted a merchant vessel five miles off. Signals were sent up repeatedly and every effort was made to attract attention, but the steamer passed on.

"Our plane was able to pick up messages from the steamer, which refused to divulge its name, but drifted to the north-west. After that no searching ships or planes were sighted, until last Tuesday, when we saw a plane off the coast of Oahu."

Rough Weather.

After Commander Rodgers landed, he said: "We experienced rough weather for just one day at sea. That was the third after we were forced down. Rain and heavy seas made matters uncomfortable, but the plane was seaworthy and stood the rough weather well."

The PN-9 No. 1 was forced down just north of the point where the destroyer Aroostook was stationed less than 330 miles from shore. The fliers experienced no trouble in landing, they said.

Naval authorities here, who never had given up hope for the PN-9 No. 1, especially in view of the fact that the wide-flung search cordon had found no wreckage, said that they believed the empty gasoline tanks had kept the seaplane buoyant and saved it from foundering.

Had the PN-9 No. 1 drifted another 24 hours without being sighted, however, it would have been past the island group and out in the open sea, where its crew probably would have perished of exhaustion.

They had drifted nearly 400 miles from their original course, Kauai being the most northerly of the Hawaiian group, about 70 miles north-west of Honolulu.

Those who were saved with the PN-9 No. 1, besides Commander John Rodgers, were: Lieut. Byron J. Connell, assistant pilot, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Otis G. Stantz, chief radio operator, Terre Haute, Ind.; Skiles N. Fove, aviation pilot, Jackson, Tenn.; William H. Bowlin, chief machinist's mate, Richmond, Ind.

When word was flashed here from the R-4 that they had been found, the city went wild with joy. Scenes reminiscent of those in Paris, New York and London on Armistice Day were enacted as natives and Americans joined in one monster celebration of thanksgiving.

Rodgers Promoted.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—Commander John Rodgers, of the PN-9 No. 1, will be appointed assistant chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics to succeed Captain A. W. Johnson, who asked for sea duty, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur announced Friday.

MANY EXHIBITS AT RURAL SCHOOL FAIR

School Pupils Showed Many Fine Products at Tweed.

TWEED, Sept. 12. — One of the rural district School Fairs of Hungerford Township was held on the Tweed Consolidated School grounds Thursday, September 10. The morning was rather gloomy and cloudy, but during the afternoon the sun became very bright.

The exhibits were numerous, including vegetables, apples, art, sewing, cooking, etc. They were shown from Thomasburg, Stoco, Moneymore and Tweed Schools.

The art was exceedingly good, and also the sewing, which was mostly done by the girls of Tweed Consolidated School under the supervision of Miss Florence Garrett.

Many were attracted by the doll house which was made by a number of boys of the manual training class, which is supervised by S. H. Connor, principal of Tweed Consolidated School. The house consists of kitchen, bedroom, living-room and parlor. Furniture was made for each room and arranged by the girls.

The booth in charge of the ladies of the Home and School Club attracted many grown-ups, as well as the children. Ice cream, hot dogs and soft drinks were the main sellers.

ALDERMEN AND BOARD MEET

Mrs. Morris told of the necessity of providing for the pupils who must now go to school until they are 16, and to whom ordinary academic training would be useless,

Grants Given

Mr. Blackwell then explained the plans, telling what accommodation for ordinary classes and for technical classes would be provided. He gave the cost as $386,136, with a grant from the Province of about $135,000. The cost of equipment would be about $35,000, of which the Province would pay half.

Mr. Gavin explained the scale on which the department of Education would pay grants toward the salaries of the technical teachers, and also how the grants would be paid. He said that if the grant came to any particular percentage, the government would pay that percentage of the amount to be raised each year.

Many questions were asked by members of the Council. They covered every point of the new building and the necessity of providing for pupils up to 16. On he question of authority, it was said by Mr. Gavin that the Council could authorize the construction without submitting the matter to the people or, if it did not wish to do so, the Board would then ask that the matter be left to the people.

There were presnt Mayor Turner, Aldermen Jones, Turner, Fife, Crowe, Greene, McIntyre, Phelan, and Denne; Trustees J. A. McKone (Chairman), Mrs. Morris, Reid, Turner, Fowler, Dr. Yelland, Dr. Craig and Strickland. Of the advisory vocational committee there were present Messrs. G. A. Gillespie, MacDonald, Gandy and Currie. City Clerk S. R. Armstrong, City Solicitor Wearing, and G. H. Thompson, secretary of the Board of Education were also present.

Alderman Greene asked if the information given could not be supplied the Aldermen in written form so that they could study it, and members of the board said that this wolud be done before the formal request was made.

OLDEST STEAMER BURNED.

KOEPING, Sweden, Sept. 11. — (Associated Press.)—The steamer Fenix, which, it was claimed, was the oldest in the world in active service, recently was destroyed by fire. Built in 1848 at Motala wharf, the boat had been making regular trips between this city and Stockholm. Since its launching it had been rechristened several times and was rebuilt in 1900.

At the time of its destruction there were 18 passengers besides the crew aboard, all of whom escaped.

LEADERS IN ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE ACCEPT INVITATION TO MEET GOVERNOR

Pinchot Seeks First-Hand Information on Situation Relating to Negotiations For New Wage Contract—Is Not Intervening.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 12. — (Canadian Press).—Governor Pinchot has invited representatives of the anthracite miners and operators to his home at Milford, Pa., to give him first-hand information on the situation as it exists in the matter of negotiating a new wage contract.

John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers, promptly accepted when the Governor called him on the telephone yesterday. W. W. Inglis, chairman of the operators' negotiating committee, invited by the Governor, also accepted and will see the Governor today. Mr. Lewis will meet the Governor at 1 p.m. Monday.

The move made by the Pennsylvania Governor was not unexpected by observers of the situation, although he had intimated through friends that he would not intervene unless requested by both sides.

The Governor in announcing his invitation to the two leaders of the contending forces, said that he did so in order to keep himself posted on the situation and not for the purpose of intervention.

C.P.R. ROADMASTER MURDER SUSPECT

L. Hodgson, of Schreiber, Ont., Accused of Crime.

NORTH BAY, Ont., Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—L. Hodgson, roadmaster of the C.P.R. at Schreiber, and a well-known employee of the railway, was arrested at Schreiber Friday, according to information received in North Bay, and is charged with the murder of Edward Hewitt, the aged watchman of the C.P.R., whose lifeless body was found on the shores of Echo Lake on Saturday evening last. Robbery is given as the motive of the alleged crime. Since the finding of the body police investigations have been conducted by Provincial Sergeant Ingram and C.P.R. Investigator Scott.

Hewitt's body was found on the shore of Echo Lake, thirty feet below the railway track where he has been employed for the past ten years as rock cut watchman. A wound apparently inflicted by a blunt instrument was on the right temple. Death had been caused, it was decided, by this wound setting up a blood clot. Hewitt had been known to have a roll of bills amounting to $500 on his person on the previous day, and this was missing. It is claimed that Roadmaster Hodgson is one of the last persons seen in the company of the deceased man. On Friday Hewitt was in Port Coldwell, a small station west of Schreiber, and had drawn $300 from the bank and he had also drawn and cashed a C.P.R. pay check.

STRIKERS CLASHED WITH SYDNEY POLICE

Seamen Tried to Prevent Arrest and Attacked Detectives.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., Sept. 11.—(Canadian Press).—A serious clash between striking British seamen and police occurred outside the Central Railway Station to-day. The strikers roughly handled two detectives who were making an arrest. The police finally drew their pistols and held off a mob of 150 while the detectives took their prisoner to the police station.

NEARING A BREAKDOWN.

A Condition That Calls For a Reliable Tonic.

Many women give so much of their time to the cares of their household that they neglect their own health and sometimes reach the verge of a breakdown before they realize that their health is shattered. Often the heart palpitates violently at slight exertion, the stomach fails to digest food and discomfort follows. The nerves become weak and headaches grow more frequent. The body grows weak and they are always depressed. This condition requires immediate treatment with such a reliable tonic as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which enrich and build up the blood, carrying renewed energy to every part of the body. The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a rundown condition is proved by the following statement from Mrs. Alex McInnes, Bowsman River, Man., who says: "About a year ago I had a serious illness which left me very anaemic. I was not able to get around to do my work; in fact, I could scarcely walk. I was troubled with palpitation of the heart with the least exertion. One day a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as they had done her much good. I followed this advice and took the pills for some weeks when I felt as well as ever. I have since been able to attend to all my household duties. The dizziness and palpitation have left me and I bless the day I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They are just the medicine for those who are weak and rundown."

You can get these pills from any dealer or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CHILEAN CROWD BIDS FAREWELL TO THE PRINCE

Military Review Feature of Concluding Programme in Valparaiso Friday.

5,000 MARCH PAST.

Wales Inspected Cavalry School—Ends Visit at Resort on Coast.

VALPARAISO, Chile, Sept. 12. —By Canadian Press Cable). — The vast popularity which the Prince of Wales created here among the Chilean people was evidenced on Friday by the immense crowds that gathered at all points visited by the British heir during his last day in this country. After filling a heavy program of engagements, the royal visitor entrained for Vina Del Mar, where he rested until to-day.

After two days of rain, the weather yesterday broke sunny and the Prince was off at an early hour for his inspection of the new cavalry school. . En route he stopped off at the statue of San Martin and placed a wreath at its base.

At the Park Casino to which His Royal Highness, accompanied by President Alessandri, proceedd in the afternoon for the postponed military review, the Prince's carriage was surrounded by a milling throng and cheer upon cheer was sent up in his honour. It was necessary for the police to clear a path for the carriage to pass into the reviewing grounds. .

The march past was made by some five thousand Chilean troopers.

A small detachment of veterans of the 1879 war between Chile, Peru and Bolivia, headed the procession. Then came the artillery, charging at a full gallop past the reviewing stand. A colorful touch was added by the presentation of a 'lancing festival" by a squadron of Chilean lancers.

The Prince went straight from the parade grounds to his waiting train and was whisked off on his short journey to Vina Del Mar.

CONSERVATIVE WOMEN MEET TO ELECT OFFICERS AT LAKEFIELD

Mrs. A. W. Mackenzie is President and Occupied the Chair Yesterday.

MRS. FALLIS THERE

Organizer Tells Her Audience to Judge Record of Government.

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 12—The organization meeting of the Conservative women of Lakefield held last night under the supervision of Mrs. Howard Fallis was well attended. Mrs. A. W. Mackenzie occupied the chair. The following are the names of those elected in the former part of the meeting. President, Mrs. A. W. Mackenzie; Vice Presidents, Mrs. Harry Ingram, Mrs. Harry Dunford, Mrs. H. Stuart, Mrs. F. J. Burgess; Ward number 1, not supplied; Ward number 2, Miss Blanche Graham.

Following the appointment of officers, Mrs. Fallis addressed the meeting on the issues and principles of the coming election. She urged the ladies to meet every argument making the sole issue the past record and policy of Premier Mackenzie King.

After it had been presented from all angles if it was decided that his government was not beneficial—if the natural resources of the country were not developed—if he is not retaining native born Canadian youth or aiding immigration and if the industrial conditions of the country are not improved then let people get behind the party which has the best interests of the country at heart, she urged.

Get the opinion of business men as to the position of the country and read the Financial Post which is strictly non-partisan, she directed.

Name the Issue

"In 1921 the issue was really on the tariff but the Liberals discussed everything and anything else. Don't be sidetracked. Don't let provincial politics govern you in any way. Don't let the record of the last four years be forgotten. The policy of the Conservative party—constructive—is what we believe conscienciously to be in the best interest of the country.

We should have faith in our party and reasons for that faith.

No real converts are made by enthusiasm not founded on knowledge. The Conservative party has always led in the great national issues and the best Liberals have been ready to join them.

When Canada was in a state of financial depression in 1878, MacDonald brought forward his national policy and was supported by Sir George Cartier and George Brown. This policy framed in the best interests of our young country caused a great increase in population.

In 1911 the Taft-Fielding Reciprocity pact sent the best Liberals to the ranks of the Conservatives who feared annexation as a direct result of the treaty."

During the past five years, Ontario has had destroyed by fire over a million acres of forest annually and in 1923 two million acres were wiped out.

CASH YIELD OF 1925 HARVEST EXPECTED TO BE THE LARGEST IN ALL THE DOMINION'S HISTORY

Estimated Increase of About Fifty Per Cent. Over Last Year.

HIGHER PRICES.

Crops Are Large and Prospect is For Prices ver Average.

OTTAWA, Sept. 12.—With an increase of about 50 per cent. over the actual production of last year, and with the prospect of prices on the average considerably in advance of those paid for the 1924 crop, this year's grain yields in Canada, according to a preliminary estimate issued from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, will probably prove the most valuable in the Dominion's history.

Wheat, while much below the big yield of 1923 of 474,000,000 bushels, will add far more this year to the nation's wealth than in that year, and in any other year, as it is this year the largest yield outside of 1923, and higher prices will rule. Fall wheat production by the whole country is estimated at 23,697,000 bushels, as compared with 22,294,000 bushels last year; spring wheat, 368,122,000, as compared with 239,803,000 last year, and all wheat, 391,819,000 bushels, as compared with 262,087,000 bushels, an increase of 129,722,000 bushels, or over 50 per cent. The wheat yield of the three Prairie Provinces is estimated at 363,131,000 bushels, an increase of 127,437,000 bushels, or nearly 50 per cent.

Barley Yield Largest on Record.

A considerable gain, too, is shown by oats, the total yield for the Dominion being estimated 514,827,000 bushels, as compared with 405,976,000 bushels; rye, 15,527,000 bushels, as compared with 13,750,000; barley, 111,709,000 bushels, as against 88,807,000; flax seed, 9,453,000 bushels, as compared with 9,694,000 bushels. The estimated yield of barley is the largest on record; that of oats has been exceeded only twice, and that of flax seed has been exceeded only by last year's total of 9,694,700 bushels.

For the three Prairie Provinces the preliminary estimates of total production in 1925, as compared with the final estimated production in 1924 (within brackets) are in bushels, as follows: Wheat, 363,131,000 (235,694,000); oats, 322,150,000 (223,325,000); barley, 93,319,000 (70,630,000); rye, 13,334,000 (11,126,000); flaxseed, 9,296,000 (9,577,900.)

The Field by Provinces.

By Provinces the yields in bushesl are: Manitoba: Wheat, 39,729,000 (41,464,000); oats 70,551,000 70,729,000; barley, 51,357,000 (40,923,000); rye, 6,149,000 (5,875,000); flaxseed, 1,619,000 (3,403,000.)

Saskatchewan — Wheat, 213,245,000 (132,918,000); oats, 160,260,000 (97,345,000); barley, 26,209,000 (17,360,000); rye, 4,851,000 (2,507,000); flaxseed, 7,630,000 (6,119,000.)

Alberta—Wheat, 110,136,000 (61,312,000), oats 91,339,000 (55,251,000; barley, 15,753,000 (12,347,000); rye, 2,334,000 (2,744,000); flaxseed, 47444 (55,900.)

Ontaro's estimated grain yield for this year and the final production of last year follow. Respectively: — Wheat 25,285,000 bushels and 23,246,000; oats, 116,617,000 bushels and 114,570,000; barley, 14,793,000 bushels 14,570,000; rye, 1,795,000 bushels, and 2,300,000; flax, 120,000 bushels and 78,000.

Other Field Crops in Ontario.

The estimated yields of other field crops in Ontario with last year's production, are as follows. Respectively, Peas, 2,268,000 and 2,456,000; beans, 886,000 and 867,000; buckwheat, 5,313,000 and 6,449,000; mixed grains, 25,697,000 and 26,403,000; husking corn, 9,973,000 and 11,141,000 potatoes, 9,402,000 and 14,980,000 cwt.; turnips, 18,581,000 cwt. and 24,[illegible],000; hay and clover, 4,572,000 tons and 5,615,000 tons; fodder corn, 3,571,000 bushels and 3,977,000; sugar beets, 344,000 tons and 334,000 tons.

Praise for Mr. Hanna

"Mr. Hanna," said the speaker, "has been put up against two elections in less than a year which does not seem fair. He has done so well as a member of the House that I hope you will realize his worth and send him back with a large majority. He has been constant in his attendance and has always looked after the interests of his constituency. He knows the needs of the great masses of the people and has during his one term in Parliament done more for this riding than has been done for it in many a year."

Why An Election?

The Premier asked the people to note the fact that the Government was not obliged to go to the country this year but could have remained in office until February, 1927. It was not, however, a question of office or drawing good salaries for fine positions. What any government needs is a majority of its own party.

"For the past four years," he said, "we have been in a position that we did not know on what support to count. We brought up matters for which we could be sure of the support required to pass them. There are now other outstanding matters that must be dealt with and we need a majority. To secure that majority we decided to appeal to the country.

The Question of Taxation

The first of these outstanding problems, Mr. King said, was taxation. When the present Government took office it had to provide for expenses that grew out of the war. Every cent of the enormous cost of the war had been paid with borrowed money, a total of over a billion dollars. Interest charges on this must be met until the principal is paid. There were after-the-war expenses that had to be met, the pension bills, the soldiers' re-establishment and the like. When the present Government came into office the yearly expenditure of the country to meet these obligations was four hundrd and fifty million dollars approximately. This has been reduced by about 25 per cent.

"Where the Meighen government spent $1," said Mr. King, "we are spending 75 cents, where they spent $4 we are spending $3. That should answer Mr. Meighen's charge that we are extravagant."

Important Issues

The most important issues, the speaker said, are the railway, immigration and fiscal policies and the reforming of the senate.

He asked the people to read his speech at Richmond Hill when he announced that an election would be held and to compare it with Mr. Meighen's speech at Wingham and decide for themselves who is telling the people more accurately the state of the country.

"As a party," said the Premier, "we have no fear. We have faith in the future of this country, the country which Mr. Meighen decries in the hope that by so doing he can injure the Government."

The Premier said he would continue the speech he had made at Cayuga and further reply to Mr. Meighen's Wingham address by discussing the tarift and immigration or emigration. He was not there to abuse the Conservative party but he found fault with Mr. Meighen as the leader of that party. Mr. Meighen, the Premier said, was deliberately trying to deceive the people on the great issues of the day on the eve of a general election.

In 1923 Parliament reduced the duty on farming and other producing machinery. It was felt that the time had come when these should be relieved of taxation. Mr. Meighen raised the alarm and declared that the agricultural implement makers would be ruined.

As soon as the session was over Mr. Meighen in a public address at Stratford made the statement that 2000 factories in Canada had closed their doors. He did not speak fairly but conveyed the impression that all this had happened since the tariff changes had been made. Even if he had said that these 2000 factories had been closed down since the Government came into power he would still have been in error.

Threshed Out in Parliament

When the next session of Parliament was held Premier King challenged the accuracy of the statement made by Mr. Meighen. Mr. Meighen declared he had a list of the closed factories but would not disclose it, saying that it would not be right to do so.

"I said then, and I say now," continued the Premier, "that Mr. Meighen had no such list. Then he said he had Dunn's report. At Wingham he said that his only assertion, the truth of which I challenged, was the one which he had made in Stratford. He repeated at Wingham the statement about 2000 factories closing their doors.

"The facts are that 2000 factories have not closed their doors. Dunn's annual report of business failures includes any concern that employs six or more hands. All of these are not factories.

"Mr. Meighen said at Wingham I had never challenged the truth of his factory statement in the House. In 1922, the first year we were in office, there were 850 failures in Canada for a total of thirty-nine million dollars. If a government is responsible for business failures then Mr. Meighen's government, not ours, was responsible for these.

"In 1923 there were 792 failures and 625 in 1924. There have been fewer failures every year since we have been in office.

Bradstreet's Commercial Agency as well as Dunn's publishes an annual report of failures and in addition analyzes the cause. In the report of 1922 the causes given are incompetency, inexperience, lack of capital, bad credit system and the like. Only 13 were due to competition, the only cause which might be attributed to the tariff. Only .4 per cent. of the failures can be attributed to the fiscal policy. When the leader of a political party goes about the country making such statements as Mr. Meighen makes he shows that he is not entitled to the confidence of the people. Failures have been less since we took office. The authority that Mr. Meighen quotes says that conditions have been worse as to factories in the United States, where they have a higher tariff than here. There is where we find fault with Mr. Meighen, he makes statements that are not true."

Cost of Immigration

Referring to the immigration problems, Premier King said that Mr. Meighen had stated in his Wingham address that the Government had no policy except to spend money without stint. In the House the leader of the Opposition had given figures to show the amount of money the government had spent on immigration in one year, explaining that his secretary had obtained the figures from the Immigration Department. When asked if these included the million dollars spent on the Wembley Exhibition he said he did not know and tried to get out of his quandry by throwing the responsibility upon his secretary. After he had been told of the real state of the case he had repeated his statement on the platform about the cost of immigration without any reference to the Wembley Exhibition.

"I would like to ask any Conservatives who may be in the audience," said the speaker, "if that is the kind of man they like to have for a leader. Why a boy in school making so many misstatements after he has been told the facts, that boy would be expelled from school. I have no desire to call Mr. Meighen names but I have a desire to keep up the standard of political discussion. This talk about factories closing down is all part of a political scheme to injure the Government."

The Emigrants to U.S.

Speaking of the people from Canada who crossed to the United States, the Premier said that after the war in which the Americans had taken a brief part, business was better in that country than here. The Canadians who went across the border to find work could not go as laborers under contract but had to list themselves as emigrants. A record was kept of their going but none when they came back. They are returning and will continue to do so in greater numbers.

Congratulates Mr. Gordon

"I congratulate Mr. Gordon," said the Premier, "on his promotion to the position of Minister of Immigration. He is a decided acquisition to the Cabinet. We chose for that position the one man in Parliament who was fitted to take up the work of the Immigration Department with vigor and understanding. I congratulate him and the part of the country from which he comes."

Changing the Flag

For the first time since the opening of the campaign Premier King made reference to the recent discussion in Parliament on the question of changing the flag. He said that a whispering campaign on this question was being conducted on the back concessions and in the lodge rooms. Among other things that were said was that a committee that had no business to do so was dealing with this matter.

The Premier then went into a detailed explanation of changes that have been made in the flag. Under a Conservative government a distinctive naval flag had been made so that vessels passing a Canadian boat at sea could tell not only that that boat was British but that it belonged to Canada. The British authorities agreed to this change and Australia and other Dominions had such distinctive naval flags.

Ex-Premier Borden proposed changes in Canada's coat of arms and a committee was appointed to make suggestions. No one complained of these changes.

The present government was asked to make changes in the flag so that the different branches of the National Defense could identify each other. A committee was appointed at a meeting of the Council when routine business was transacted.

"They say," continued the speaker, "that the proposed changes were my idea. I did not even know that the order had been passed as I was not at that meeting. When I saw that the Opposition intended to make political capital out of the matter the order was cancelled. I stated in the House that nothing further would be done except by resolution of Parliament and that no changes would be made without the consent of the British."

Premier King said that when the soldiers of Canada marched through London during the war, people could tell that they were British but not that they were Canadians. If the returned men asked for a distinctive flag he believed that they were entitled to it.

A Canadian, a member of the Government is head of the League of Nations, the organization that comes nearest to being the Parliament of man. Canadians should be proud of and true to their country and if they were they could never be false to the Empire. The Premier declared he never wished to see present relations changed. He does not believe in annexation and does not believe either that the people of Canada want it.

When Premier King closed his address, the delivery of which occupied one hour and a quarter, he was loudly cheered.

Mr. Gordon's Address

Hon. G. N. Gordon, whose appearance at the speakers table was the signal for another outburst of applause, began his address with a complimentary reference to Mr. Hanna, who, he said, was intensely human, who is a tireless worker in the interests of his constituents and who soon gets to know his way around. He had done more in Parliament in the one year he had been there than Gus Porter had done in 24.

Mr. Gordon was glad to read in the press reports of yesterday that an aviation centre was to be established at Deseronto and this he added, would benefit Belleville for the two places would grow together and eventually become one city. Two hundred men would be brought from Camp Borden to Deseronto to develop the Hydro plane branch of the service on the Bay.

Advice to Railway Men

"The man who votes for Arthur Meighen," he said, "is shortening his job on the C. N. R., for Mr. Meighen never gave that road a fair show."

Mr. Meighen, the speaker continued, is now in favor of the compulsory teaching of the French language in the public schools. This shows that he is linking himself up with the Nationalists and that he is grasping at every chip in his effort to save himself from the drowning due him on October 29.

Mr. Meighen was in favor of the admission into the country of oleomargarine duty free. He was a protectionist for the manufacturer but a free trader for spurious butter that competed with the dairy interests of the country.

The Canadian dollar is now the only one that is above par. In Mr. Meighen's time it was worth just 82 cents and it will sink again to that figure if Mr. Meighen is returned to power.

Mr. Meighen, while Premier, called R. B. Bennett to the Cabinet after the latter had said that the Premier was bound hand and foot to the Canadian Northern.

Canada's national debt, Mr. Gordon said, had been rduced $20,000,000 in the past year. There have been fewer failures during the past 12 months than in any similar period since the present govrnment took office.

Mr. Meighen says that if returned to power he will cut out extravagance but Mr. Gordon spoke of the heavy expenditures he made when he selected lawyers other than the Government's legal representatives when the transfer of the Grand Trunk to public ownership was under discussion, thousands of dollars having been unnecessarily paid out.

Mr. Meighen has been whispering death. He has been decrying the country and by so doing is driving men out of it.

Mr. Meighen's Chances

Mr. Gordon said that Mr. Meighen has 49 members in the house including himself. In order to get a majority of one it will be necessary for him to win 68 more seats and Mr. Gordon fails to see that he has any chance of doing so.

The Minister of Immigration concluded his addresses with another complimentary reference to Mr. Hanna of whom it could not be said that he spent only 10 days in the House in 24 years. Mr. Hanna had since his election settled a matter in Trenton that had been hanging fire for a long time. He has given good service and can do better yet.

"Mr. Hanna," said the speaker, "is going to be elected your member on October 29."

Not Ashamed of Record

In a brief address, during which he was heartily cheered, Mr. Hanna said that he intended to stand by the old ship. He carried the riding before and would do it again next month. After one session in Parliament he was not ashamed of anything he had done.

Held A Reception

After the audience, accompanied by the Belleville Band, had joined in singing the National Anthem, Premier King and Messrs. Gordon and Hanna stood at the foot of the stairway leading from the grand stand and shook hands with the audience as they passed out. Men, women and children, availed themselves of the opportunity to meet the distinguished visitors and to wish them success in the work which lies before them.

Not a single person left the grand stand during the speeches and hundreds stood on the race track for the same length of time without an apparent shift of position. The people had come from all parts of the riding and from neighboring constituencies to hear an official message and they followed the speakers with the closest attention. An air of confidence pervaded the assemblage.

FARM NEWS AND PROBLEMS

FIND FEW CASES OF FOUL BROOD IN DURHAM COUNTY APIARIES, BUT SOME BEEKEEPERS LOST HEAVILY

Clean-up Measures Stamped Out Disease Which Was Prevalent Last Year.

BURN INFECTED HIVES.

Pest Comes Mostly From Imported Bees, and is Spread By Honey Sales.

MILLBROOK, Sept. 12.--Foul brood, which is one of the most destructive, and difficult to control, of pests among bees, made its appearance in a few instances in this neighborhood again this season.

Last year, practically every beekeeper within a radius of several miles had his apiary affected in a more or less serious degree by this pest. Gordon Williamson, the veteran apiarist of the township, was the only one whose colonies were entirely free from the foul brood. Clean-up measures were adopted under instruction from the Government Inspector, or by following directions contained in the circulars, and personal letters, sent out by the Apiculture Branch of the Department of Agriculture.

Some beekeepers followed the plan of burning all the wooden parts of the colony with gasoline, and melting down the wax in the combs. Others used the treatment method, recommended by the O.A.C., Guelph, by which diseased combs are soaked for forty-eight hours in a formalin mixture, destroying the spores, and leaving them ready for use after a little washing. Experience, in a number of cases, shows that, while the treatment method usually eliminates foul brood from the colony, it is more apt to be retained in the yard than when the plan of destruction is followed.

Mr. Offa Williamson, 7th Line, Cavan, had about $200 of bees, and material from his apiary, burned last season, but his apiary this year, though considerably reduced in size, is quite free from the disease. The Ontario Beekeepers' Association has been urging the destruction of all infected colonies and equipment stating "when beekeepers undertake the problem of disease control from the viewpoint of saving everything possible unless it is known to be positively infected, such attitude is fatal to success. One can reduce foulbrood losses by following that policy, but cannot eliminate the disease entirely."

Mr. F. McMahon has been the heaviest loser in this vicinity, material from his apiary to the value of fully $500 having been burned in the early part of the season, following the visit of Inspector Jarvis, of the O. A. C., Guelph.

American Variety Serious.

The European foulbrood, which makes its appearance when the bees are in the larvae stage, is not so serious, nor so difficult to control, as the American variety, the latter being discovered after the cells are capped over. Mature bees are not affected by it, but eventually the colonies will die out, lacking replenishing because of the young bees being destroyed by the brood.

Mr. McMahon had 35 hives in 1924, and these were reduced to 10, following infection last season. This year only two hives are left in the apiary. Thirty-eight hundred pounds of honey was the average yield, and two years ago Mr. McMahon reached the peak of production with six thousand pounds. This year, following so discouraging an experience, he has not as yet extracted at all.

Mr. Inch, of Port Hope, who has a large apiary, and is the district inspector, accompanied Inspector Jarvis when he made his rounds this season. It is said that in York county, foulbrood has obtained such a foothold it is considered practically impossible to rid the apiaries of the disease, but a determined effort practically impossible to rid the apiaries was made last year, and continued this season, to stamp it out entirely in Durham county. For this reason such a wholesale destruction of infected colonies and equipment has been carried out—the only sure method of destroying the brood. Mr. F. Lewers, of Frazerville, had one or two colonies, with hives, combs, and other equipment, burned this season, while the official inspection was under way. So far as can be learned this is the only other case, besides that of Mr. F. McMahon, where the foulbrood made its appearance in this district this year.

From Imported Bees.

The foulbrood is brought into the country in two ways—either in the packages of imported bees, usually from the United States, or in honey from infected colonies. The discarded container may be a source of infection, and even the water in which such containers are washed, if thrown out, may attract the bees, who carry it to the hives, and so the mischief starts.

Pretty good proof that imported colonies bring infection is found in the fact that Mr. Gordon Williamson, whose apiary entirely escaped infection, never imports any bees, raising his own swarms. Mr. Williamson, who is now in his eighty-ninth year, has probably been in the bee business for over half a century, a good sized apiary being always an important part of his farm equipment. Though advancing years are taking toll of strength and memory, he is still interested in the work, and able to give assistance with the extraction of the honey, and in other ways. At present there are thirty hives in the apiary on the Williamson farm, 7th Line, Mr. W. B. Williamson, with whom his father makes his home, taking charge of the major part of the work.

A demonstration of the nature, and control, of foulbrood was held on the farm of Mr. John Rowland, 4th Line, Cavan, last spring, Mr Charles Rowland, who is a graduate in apiculture from the O. A. C., having his apiary located on his brother's farm. As Mr. Rowland's bees are entirely free from the brood pest this season, it would apparently have been wiser to hold the demonstration on Mr. McMahon's premises, where the disease was particularly bad. Inspector Jarvis was in charge, and a good deal of practical information was given.

Indifferent Owner Helps.

The greatest ally of the disease is, of course, the indifferent bee owner, since his colonies are at all times a productive nursery for its propogation, and will affect the yards of even the most careful and efficient apiarist if in the same neighborhood. The new registration law, which provides that all beekeepers must be licensed by the Department of Agriculture, through the Provincial Apiarist, and that no bees shall be sold or even given away without a certificate that they are free from disease, is proving a decided aid to those in the business of bee keeping.

Colonies of bees which have been Italianized are always free of foulbrood, either the European, or American, brand. The increased grant, according to the Ontario Beekeepers' Association, given by the Provincial and Dominion governments two years ago, is the chief reason why distinct progress in the suppression of foulbrood among bees has been made.

Experienced local bee-keepers, in company with many others in the province, vouch for the fact that honey differs in color, and flavor, according to the nature of the soil on which the clover, alsike, and other sources of this "safest and most pleasant and delicious of sweets," are grown.

"Does honey save the sugar bag at all?" is a pertinent question through the asking of which the Department of Agriculture, by its Apicultural Branch is trying to influence the housewives of the province to use more of this healthful product in cooking. "Not only is it valuable as a table food, but a little honey in cake, and bread, will retain the moisture and keep these foods from drying out."

Recipe Books.

Books of recipes are furnished free by the Department, and the recommendation is also passed on that honey, which is anti-rust, will furnish an anti-freeze mixture for use in car radiators. "Use the cheapest of buckwheat honey, taking a pail that will just fill your radiator, put 20 pounds of honey in the pail, fill with really hot water, stirring until you get a stable mixture. Most of us have Ford cars, or trucks, but if you have a smaller radiator, make the mixture fifty-fifty."

Regarding the marketing of buckwheat, and dark amber honey, the Beekeepers' Association says the Jewish trade will pay a good price, and take large quantities of this grade, while Belgium and Sweden also prefer the really dark honey. Great Britain and Canada demand the lighter grades, but the lumber camps would rather have the dark amber, or buckwheat.

WINTERING BEES FOR HONEY CROP

Bees Must Go Through Winter in Good Shape to be Profitable.

PROTECT FROM COLD.

If you want a big crop of honey next year, you must see that bees go through the winter in good shape. Tests that have been carried on for several years show that wintering colonies in a heavy packing-case which protects the bees against rapid temperature changes makes possible the wintering of the colony without serious losses and with a small amount of stores. A colony so wintered loses no time starting to make honey in spring.

Putting the hives in a bee cellar is another good way to protect bees against the extremes of winter weatherjn the North. The main thing is to keep the temperature uniform by proper protection, because in a large apiary the amount of winter stores consumed is a considerable item of cost. If bees are not properly protected they use up much of their energy in maintaining the cluster temperatures, and then in spring when energy is most needed for building up the colony in preparation for the spring honey flow, the bees are weak. Colonies in the best spring condition gather by far the largest amounts of honey during the season.

Tests have also been carried on to find out the amount of packing for best success when bees are wintered outdoors in packing-cases. These tests indicate that wheat straw is the best material to use in packing, while planer-shavings, clover chaff and forest leaves follow in order. It has generally been considered that wheat straw was the poorest insulating material, and forest leaves the best. There is, however, considerable difference in the insulating value of fores leaves, depending upon whether they are packed loosely or tamped down. Forest leaves do not have so good insulating values when loosely packed as when tamped down.

IDEAL WEATHER FOR HARVESTING IN THE PROVINCE

Department Report Shows That Great Deal of Harvest Is In.

ALFALFA GOOD.

Pastures Have Been Good and Milk Flow Is Keeping Up.

A full week of ideal weather practically all over the province has permitted farmers to work at high pressure in harvesting and threshing. In the Southwestern and Central areas the greater part of mid-summer harvest has been completed. In the chief alfalfa seed sections, this crop has received first consideration; all available threshing machines have been working on alfalfa in order to thresh as much as possible from the field. Much of the grain crop is still in the fields in these districts. The bulkier crops of the East require more labour and time and haying has not been completed in this section. Grain harvesting is just commencing in Northern Ontario.

Reports on threshing returns continue to be very satisfactory. Some Carleton County men, who have farmed in this section for over 40 years, consider this the best crop in their locality, during that period. In Peel County, where two-thirds of the alfalfa seed crop has been either threshed or stored in barns, yields range from five to twelve bushels per acre, with an average probably of six to six and a half bushels. Similar returns have been realized in many other counties.

Although pastures suffered in Western Ontario earlier in the year, and while they are going back somewhat now in Eastern counties, grass is plentiful for this season of the year and the milk flow is keeping up fairly well.

Those in a position to know predict that a large number o beef cattle will be fed in Eastern Ontario this year, on account of the heavy hay crop and liberal supply of other feeds. One hundred grade Shorthorn feeder cattle were imported into Hastings last week.

Late blight of potatoes has been reported as serious in several counties.

Grey—Honey will be plentiful. One man here has produced seventy-five tons of white honey this year.

Halton—Marketing: Burlington cooperative Fruit Growers are shipping a carload of Clapp Favourite pears and a few Duchess apples to London, England. This will be more or less a trial shipment. Pears and apples are wrapped in paper and properly packed in boxes. There will be also a shipment of Bartlett pears within the next couple of weeks.

Huron—Labour Conditions: Labour is getting scarcer and farmers are anticipating quite a shortage before the fall is over. From three stations affecting the north of this county and the south of Bruce, 137 harvest excursion tickets were sold yesterday

Our fruit men are beginning to worry as to whether this will clean up the available men for picking apples this fall. One of our growers stated yesterday that the present year's crop in Huron County will be the largest apple crop in 10 years.

Peel—Harvesting: Practically all of the alfalfa seed crop has been cut. Approximately two-thirds of the crop has been either drawn to the barn or threshed from the stook. Yields are varying from 5 to 12 bushels per acre with an average of around 6 to 6½ per acre. While practically all grain is cut with the exception of a small acreage in the north of the County, a large amount still remains in the stook, particularly in the alfalfa district, where this crop is receiving first consideration.

FROST DAMAGED CORN AT BETHANY

Heavy Frost of Last Week Had Serious Effect on Crops.

BETHANY, Sept. 12.—Quite a heavy frost was noticed on Thursday and Friday mornings. Large fields of corn in the vicinity of Manvers station have been badly damaged by the frost. The root crop is greatly in need of rain for the ground is very dry. The grain crop is almost all in, and the farmers are threshing their pease in the fields

RAIN PUTS NEW LIFE INTO EVERYTHING

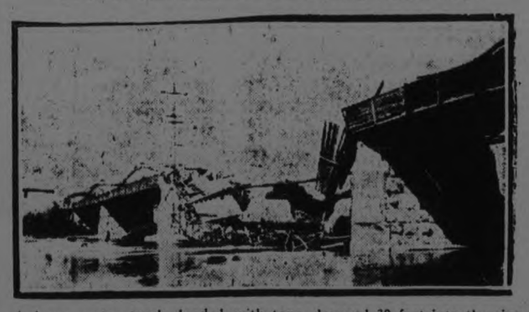
Corn, Roots and Meadows All Look Much Better Now.

WARSAW, Sept. 12.—The rain, which commenced early Wednesday evening and kept up all night is putting new life into nearly everything. Corn, roots, late potatoes, garden stuff, and meadows, are all looking better. A tinge of green shows in the fields on all sides, where before it was quite brown. Garden stuff that looked nearly as limp in the morning, as in the evening, looks fresh.

Warsaw Woman's Institute will meet in the Institute rooms on Thursday, Sept. 10. Pastor Pinkerton will speak on Institute work.

School opened on Tuesday morning with the same teachers in Warsaw: Mr. Currie and Miss Quinn, Miss Fitzgerald remains at No. 5, Douro.

BRIDGE FELL UNDER TRUCK



A large motor truck, loaded withstone, dropped 30 feet into the river, taking the driver with it, when thethird span from the north end of the bridge over the Grand River at Cale-donia, Ont., which connects the Hamilton and Port Dover highway,collapsed. The driver, who suffered a bruised shoulder, owed his life tothe fact that the truck remained upright on striking the river bed.

GREAT VARIETY AMONG GRAINS

Some Fields Showed Heavy Yield, While Others Were Light.

RAIN NEEDED.

MILLBROOK, Sept. 12.—W. E. Belch, 5th Line, Cavan, realized 1,100 bushels as the result of his oat crop this season, threshing having been completed recently. One field yielded 50 bushels to the acre, and another from 35 to 40 bushels, the acreage giving the better yield being better land.

Mr. Belch had a total of 30 acres sown in oats this year.

Herds Tested.

Inspector Wall, of the Health of Animals Department, Toronto, was in the vicinity recently testing a number of herds of pure-bred cattle. Among the farms visited was that of T. W. McCamus, who specializes in Durham, and Mr. W. E. Belch s, whose herd of twenty-three pure-bred Holsteins passed a clean test. One year ago Mr. Belch received his certificate for a fully accredited herd, his cattle having then passed the third test without a single reactor. In cases where a certificate has been granted, further tests are made once in twelve months, and Mr. Belch, who increases his herd by breeding rather than purchase, has been fortunate enough to escape any infection among his cattle during the past year.

Threshing Completed.

The majority of the farmers on Fallis Line completed threshing last week, with the exception of oats, the yield of Canner Peas on one farm, from 17 acres, being 15 bushels per acre, while 8 acres, on another farm, gave 15 bushels. Five acres, in another case, returned 24 bushels to the acre, and yet another reports, from 14 acres, but 10 bushels.

Eight acres of Horsford's Market Garden Peas were not worth thershing, the total yield being 10 bushels, but 11 acres on another farm gave a return of 250 bushels.

Fall wheat, which has averaged about 30 bushels to the acre, showed in one case 200 bushels from a 10-acre field which was sowed late last fall. An equal quantity was realized on another farm from but 9 acres, while another reports 37 bushels to the acre.

Spring wheat, of the Marquis variety, yielded 21 bushels from 7 acres, while 10 acres of Colorado returned 20 bushels. Of other varieties, 9 acres gave about 200 bushels in bulk, but the grain is small and shrunken and will not weigh out.

Twenty acres of barley, threshed so far, show a return of about 25 bushels to the acre, and one 10 acres of oats gives the encouraging result of 70 bushels per acre. It is estimated that oats will average 55 bushels per acre in this section of the township.

Rye, from a 10-acre field, yielded 15 bushels to the acre, and an 8-acre field returned 13 bushels.

Good Wheat Yield.

Mr. W. B. Williamson, 7th Line, Cavan, has threshed his wheat, the return being between 45 and 50 bushels per acre. The land on Mr. Williamson's farm is especially adapted for wheat raising. Other grains, which were good crops this season, are stored in the barns, but have not yet been threshed.

Rain Needed.

Rain is badly needed to put the ground in shape for ploughing in preparation for sowing fall wheat. At present, owing to the extended dry spell, where plowing has been attempted, the ground is turned up in hard lumps which practically no amount of cultivation will make fit for seed sowing.

HESSIAN FLY IN WINTER WHEAT

Percentage of Plants Infected Has Grown in Recent Years.

VARIETIES DIFFER.

In each of the past four years the Hessian fly has been working more or less in the winter wheat crops of Ontario. In the Field Husbandry Department at the Ontario Agricultural College the ravages of this pest have been studied in each of forty varieties of winter wheat. The estimated average percentage of plants containing Hessian fly was 3 in 1920, 26 in 1921, 7 in 1922, and 15 in 1923. The susceptibility of the different varieties varies considerably. The Imperial Amber, O. A. C. No. 104, Dawson's Golden Chaff, and Red Rock were below the average and the Early Red Clawson, Kanred, Gold Coin or No. 6, and Early Genesee Giant were above the average for infested plants in the last four years, the percentage being 4 for the first and 22 for the last of the above named varieties.

CROPS LARGE AT KINGS WHARF

Many Farmers Have Had to Stack Grain Outside Barns.

THRESHERS BUSY.

KING'S WHARF, Sept. 12—The continued dry weather has ripened the grain and hastened the harvest. The farmers in this locality are not nearly finished as there were so many fields of heavy oats. The wheat yield was not as good as other sections, being from 20 to 30 bushels to the acre. The oats are the heaviest, they ever were around here, but there have been no oats threshed yet to know the yield. Farmers with large barns have to stack this year, as the barns are filled up.

The heat and dry weather has ruined the red clover and buckwheat. There were some beautiful fields of buckwheat but the grain has all dried up and it is all brown now, two weeks before it should be.

The gardens here are also burned up and the pastures are no good. A few farmers have to feed hay to their cows, as the milk flow has gone down to over half. There is also a scarcity of water and people near the lake drive their stock there for water.

The hum of the threshing machine is heard all around but it is mostly peas in the field which are threshed and here they are a very poor crop; some people have not got the seed.

Messrs. Wm. Herlihey Jr. and Martin Herlihey sold a fine drove of cattle to Mr. Curtis of Fenelon Falls, for a good price. Cattle are in demand at present.

MOST FARMERS HAVE CROPS IN Hot Weather Hastened Harvest—Some Grains Are a Failure.

MILK FLOW LOW.

DOWNEYVILLE, Sept. 12.—The dry weather and intense heat has hastened the harvest and most people here are finished.

There are three threshing outfits here now. Jones Bros. threshing alsike and sweet clover, Curtin and Bell Bros. threshing grain. Martin Carroll Sr., south of the village threshed 8 acres of alsike last week, which yielded 7 bushels of first-class seed to the acre. The buckwheat and red clover are a failure. The gardens are all withered up and there is a great scarcity of water. With poor pasture and water scarce, the milk flow has gone down to half.

LIGHT OAT YIELD NEAR STANWOOD

Heavy Straw Gave Promise of Large Harvest of Grain.

IS GOOD WEIGHT.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 12.—Farmers in the vicinity of Stanwood report that their oat crop, which has been harvested and threshed has not turned out as well as the heavy yield of straw promised. Thirty bushels to the acre is about the average. The grain, however, is well filled and weighs well.

W. M. Stephens, whose farm lies just outside the town limits in Seymour East, drew the last load of his harvest into the barn last week and an hour later he was threshing it. He had 900 bushels of oats, the ground upon which the grain grew being estimated at 30 acres.

Buckwheat Injured.

The only crop still standing in the fields is buckwheat, and farmers say that it has been injured by recent frosts.

One Yield of Oats.

A. C. Connor of town, recently threshed for Ernest Irwin, on the town line between Rawdon and Seymour, light loads of oats and the average was 50 bushels to the load.

THIS YEARS CROP WILL RETIRE ALL MANITOBA DEBT

Province in Enviable Position With Farm Revenue Doubled.

SPENDING POWER UP.

Business Preparing to Make Full Speed Ahead.

Manitoba has the enviable record, and one that has probably not been equalled, of having doubled its farm revenue in a single year, thus adding a spending power of $100 per capita. The agricultural revenue of the province was increased from $84,556,000 in 1923 to $161,913,000 last year, and the sequel was a wholesale settlement of outstanding debts. As a consequence, busines sis no longer retarded by this factor.

While the crops have suffered in some areas from adverse weather conditions, the loss is now stated to be much lower than was expected. The second largest crop in the history of the province is confidently expected, and the total value of the crops is expected to bed somewhere in the neighborhood of $160,000,000, as against $136,025,000 last year. There will probably be some reduction in actual volume of wheat and oats, but the total values will be greatly increased by present high prices. There has been a general feeling throughout the province that another good year, such as that of 1924, would put the farmers and business back upon a sound basis, and prospects for this are remarkably good at the moment.

As a result of the favorable farm outlook, retail and wholesale business are discounting the grdater prospective spending power and are stocking up with goods to a greater extent than has been the case for some years. This is especially true in the hardware lines, in which a very keen demand is looked for later in the year. The implement and automobile firms are laying their plans for aggressive sales promotion, and are counting on a larger return from this area than ever before.

Mixed Farming Expands.

One of the favorable features of the farming situation is the very marked expansion in branches of farming other than wheat raising. There has been a remarkable development, for example, in the dairy industry. While the total value of dairy products has remained more or less stationary during the last three or four years, due to certain conditions beyond control, the foundations are being laid for much greater capacity. The number of high grade milk cows is increasing rapidly, and the market for Manitoba che- : and butter is expanding. The history of this industry for the past twenty-five years shows the growth of a basic industry from its inception until it now accounts for an annual revenue of about $14,000,000.

Industrially, little progress is being made. Natural conditions point to Manitoba as a grain-growing area and a general farming area and there is little likelihood of any material development along industriar lines in the immediate future at least. At the same time, local needs are such as to create sufficient demand for a large number of smaller plants, and during the past twelve months, a considerable number of these have been added.

From a standpoint of fur production, the past year has been a very successful one. Probably the largest consignment of furs ever received by the Fur Auction Sales Company of Winnipeg arrived recently from the north. Shipments already received are valued at about half a million dollars.

All factors combined, Manitoba's outlook is extremely bright, and basic factors indicate that business in this area will be as good or better, relatively, than in any other part of the Dominion.

Certain basic figures in Manitoba's revenue follow:—

SWEET CLOVER SOWN IN OATS

Biennial Variety With Oats Makes Good Fall Pasture.

ANNUAL NUISANCE.

In the field crop experiments at the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph in the past three years, Biennial White Flowering Sweet Clover has given a greater yield per acre, although later, than the White Flowering annual or Hubam in the first year's growth when both kinds were sown alone under similar conditions and at the same date in the spring of the year. When Sweet Clover has been grown with Oats, the Biennial variety has given good returns for autumn pasture. The Annual Sweet Clover when sown with Oats, either at the time of seeding or when the Oats were 3 or 4 inches high, has been a nuisance in the grain crop. A mixture of O. A. C. No. 72 Oats and Annual White Flowering Sweet Clover, however, is being cut this year as a hay crop, and in the future this combination will be studied more particularly from the standpoint of green fodder and of hay production. So says Dr. C. A. Zavitz, Department of Extension, O. A. C., Guelph.

Attempts of Novices Who Lacked Art, Brought Science to Disrepute.

WATER NEEDED.

Many Farmers Have to Seek For Wells That Won't Fail.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 12.—On a vast number of Ontario farms, the water supply becomes an acute problem every time there is a drought extending over a period of three or four weeks. Wells, ponds and small streams sun dry and some farms are not irrigated by creeks that never fail summer or winter.

Digging wells on these periodically arid farms is often as blind a speculation as searching for minerals. Where one man succeeds in locating a spring, ten fail altogether or have to go so deep that the expense often exceeds the entire profits of the farm for a year.

The "Water Wizard."

From time immemorial, men have professed to be able to locate a spring and to tell to within a few feet how far it lies beneath the surface. Such men would take a forked branch of a tree, preferably a bough, and grasping the ends of the forks, one in each hand, would solemnly and with mystical air, slowly march across the ground where it was desirable to sink a well. The forked branch was held with the bottom pointed upright and as the "wizard" made his way the branches began to turn in his grasp until the bottom of the fork, supposed to be attracted by water, reversed its position and pointed downward to a point which the "wizard' carefully marked. That point, he declared housed a spring, how far under the ground it was, depending upon the qelocity with which the branches turned toward the earth.

A Disputed Problem.

The efficacy of this method of locating water has, ever since it was first used, been a topic for argument. Scientists and other doubting Thomases have sneered at it as a mere superstition. Others brand it as a means to hoax farmers and other householders into sinking wells, when they hesitated on account of the probable expense.

It has been known, however, that well-diggers, who were also "wizards' have undertaken to dig a well and to charge nothing unless water were found at a depth of say 30 feet. When they struck a never-failing spring at considerably less than the stipulated depth, those who had sneered at the venture went away wondering if not actually converted.

What a Scientist Says.

Edward James Cowain, who, by methods peculiar to himself but which have been proved successful by years of trial, is the mining prospector who located the deposits of fluorspar and zinc near Madoc, which have been taken over by the Canada Resources Syndicate. Mr. Cowain, in his long line as a prospector, has frequently been called upon to locate water as well as minerals, for in a mining camp a generous supply of that liquid is essential, both as a beverage and for operating the machinery

Believes in Method.

Mr. Cowain believes that water can be located by the method above alluded to. He will refuse to discuss this method, however, if any reference is made to it as either witchery or wizardry. It is, he declares, sufficiently established to be above any terms even implying doubt or contempt, having reached the standard of one of those scientific marvels which the human mind is unabie to solve but must accept with blind faith.

No Job for Novices.

Mr. Cowain says that not every man, with a forked branch cut at random from some convenient tree or bush, can locate water, and that it is the novices who have brought what is really an established science into doubt or disrepute. It requires a peculiar kind of timber—just what kind is guarded as a secret by the professionals—and, besides, the man using the fork has to have some peculiar element in his anatomy

Banks on His Belief.

So strong is Mr. Cowain's belief in this method that he is prepared to bank on it. He is building for himself on the mining property referred to a handsome bungalow that is located on the crest of a hill. The place will not be complete without a well and that hill is the last place in the world where uninitiated would expect to find water, but Mr. Cowain has no misgivings in that score. He made sure of water before he broke sod for his new house, and is certain that he will find it not too far under the surface, close to his back porch.

Another Case in Point.

To come down to a concrete case—George Hamilton, a retired farmer in Streetsville has for years been known as the "water wizard" of Halton County, where he farmed before honestly accumulated wealth made it possible for him to give up work. No farmer who knew of Mr. Hamilton's gift would think of digging a well until he had searched for a proper location with his magic wand.

Mr. Hamilton's fame spread until the Ontario Government heard of him and he was invited to try his skill at some of the Provincial institutions separated from urban water works. Although Mr. Hamilton at first modestly hesitated over entering what might be termed the ranks of the professionals, he was finally induced to consent, and in the new and more distinctive domain his success was as marked as ever.

STOOK THRESH ON MANY FARMS

Barns Are Too Full of Old Hay to Leave Room For Grain.

SOME GOOD YIELDS.

BURNBRAE, Sept. 12.—Threshing is the order of the day for some time now, with very little time for anything else. A good deal of stook threshing is being done this fall as many farmers have their barns well-filled with hay. Grain generally is yielding well and in most cases equals expectations. Mr. Geo. Barnum recently thershed 1920 bushels for Mrs. Hay, Menie, over 470 bushels of this being fall wheat. His next job was threshing about 1300 bushels of spring grain on the farm of Robt. Clough.

Two weeks of dry weather during the last of August made a decided change in the appearance of the country. Pastures have become dry and bare, while plowing is almost impossible except where land was spring-plowed. Corn is maturing fast during the hot weather and some farmers are considering silo-filling this week. Jack Frost made his appearance on the 28th of August, and some low-lying fields of corn were severely frozen. One local farmer, whose corn did not germinate well, had the half-crop, which did come, frozen, so has turned his cows into the field. Some good stands of early-sown silo corn are seen. Wm. Rannie, Menie, has a good field, almost ready for the silo, while Messrs. J. Thompson and A. Hume also have well-matured fields. Geo. Anderson, 8th Concession, reports silo corn within two inches of twelve feet in height.

Some good fields of buckwheat are seen through the district, but some fear that the dry weather will have withered the bloom so that the crop will be a partial failure.

Roots and potatoes seem to be standing the dry weather well, but late garden stuff is withering and prospects are poor for the boys who wish to visit melon patches this fall.

Cheese prices hold steady with a slightly stronger feeling. Eggs are again over the 30c mark, but production is falling off.

53 BUSHELS FROM ONE LOAD OF OATS

Orland Farmer Had Heavy Yield—Corn Borer is Reported.

ORLAND, Sept. 12.—J. L. Loomis recently threshed 53 bushels of oats from just an average load.

J. B. Moran sold 1000 bushels of his this year's wheat crop to Fred Cory, a shipper from Frankford. The buyer employed two Campbellford truckmen o haul the wheat to Frankford. Mr. Moran's whole wheat crop was red fall wheat, which brings 5 cents more on the bushel than the white varieties.

Frank Harnden and many others complain of tip burn and some blight on their potatoes.

RAILWAY UNIONS TO DISCUSS PLAN TO AMALGAMATE

This Will Be Most Important Subject and Biennial Conference.

EXPECT SANCTION.

Co-ordination of C.N.R. and C.P.R. Will Also Be Talked of at Meeting.

TORONTO, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—Amalgamation of all railroad labor organizations into a composite industrial union will be one of the important matters for discussion at the biennial convention of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employees which opens here on Sept. 21. This step has been under consideration by railway workers in Canada and the United States during the past two years, and it is likely that the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employees will sanction the proposal officially at this meeting.

The co-ordination of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways, as suggested by the Senate Committee, will be discussed, but, according to President A. R. Mosher, any pronouncement undoubtedly will be from a different angle than that of the Senate.

The formation of study groups throughout the country under the supervision of local divisions of the Brotherhood to delve into economic and social problems, is also included in the convention agenda. Unemployment, old age pensions, insurance for the membership, more expenditious methods adjusting grievances, wage schedules, working conditions, etc., are other matters that will be considered.

According to the Department of Labor's annual report, the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employees is second in membership in Canada among the railroad labor organizations, with a total strength of 13,300. It is exceeded only by the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, which has a reported membership of 14,400. The C.B.R.E. is classified as an international organization because its membership is open to railway workers in the United States (there is one local division located in Buffalo), but in reality it is an all-Canadian union. The head office is in Ottawa. The C.B.R.E. has 160 local divisions throughout Canada, composed of clerical stations, shop, shed, roundhouse, sleeping car, dining car, express and smaller groups of employees, mostly on the Canadian National Railways.

The C.B.R.E. came into existence 17 years ago at a meeting in Moncton of employees on the old Intercolonial Railway. There were 11 local divisions, with a total membership of 597, at the inception. A. R. Mosher, employed at the Halifax freight sheds, was elected the first president, and has been re-elected at each succeeding convention since. Six general committees are now maintained for the negotiation of wage and working conditions schedules and the adjustment of individual grievances. These committees are Atlantic, Central and Western Regions, C.N.R.; Canadian National Express; C.N.R. Dining Car System; T. & N. O. Railway.

Discussing the activities of the C.B.R.E. since the last biennial meeting, President Mosher stated, in spite of economic conditions which had resulted in reductions of trade union membership generally, the Brotherhood not only had maintained its strength but added substantially to it. He emphasized the growing demand among Canadian workers for information concerning economic and social problems, and said that the C.B.R.E. was giving more and more attention towards meeting this demand. Mr. Mosher considered this was a good sign from a national point of view.

"An informed public is the only sure avenue to national progress, and our Brotherhood is sufficiently seized with its duty in this respect that it is supplying its membership with explanations and measured opinions on every subject of broad importance, and particularly all matters concerning the railway problem," he said.

Of the many activities of direct import to the Brotherhood membership, Mr. Mosher considered that the consolidation of wage working conditions schedules on the Grand Trunk lines with those of the Canadian National Railways was the outstanding accomplishment during the past two years. This consolidation resulted in the removal of many ambiguities previously the causes of misunderstanding, and a great stride towards unification of wages and working conditions over the whole C. N. system.

Looking to the future, Mr. Mosher declared that the future progress of Canadian railroads, to a great extent, was in the hands of the employees. It was generally acknowledged, he said, that the co-operation of the employees during the past five years had much to do with the improved position of the Canadian National Railways, and he hoped the people of Canada would do their share in making possible a continuation of this progress "by conceding the right of the railroad worker to at least a wage based on a decent standard of living."

BY JOHN MAC ELHINNY

A New York minister, who shall be nameless because we can't remember his name, is decrying the prevalence of superstition in these supposedly enlightened times.

"To rap wood or have misgivings because thirteen are seated at table is to become again children of Mother Goose," he says.

In other words, he believes that what is sauce for Mother Goose should be apple sauce for reasoning human beings.

We are not, of course, superstitious ourselves, and when we refuse to light three cigarettes from one match we always refuse jokingly, but we always refuse.

And nobody can tell us that it isn't unlucky to have thirteen people seated at a dinner table. Especially if we are the host and have to pay the bills.

Most superstitions play safe and are indications of bad luck, which is what we are most likely to get, in any event.

Many of them are based upon common sense. Take the matter of lighting three cigarettes on one match. Misfortune is apt to follow immediately by having your fingers burned by the time the third cigarette is lighted.

Some superstitions are so well established that they can almost be counted on. For instance, if a man with a brunette wife comes home with some curly blond hair clinging to his coat lapel it is almost a sure sign of trouble.

If a person walking along the street should inadvertently step on a discarded banana peel he can confidently look forward to an early fall.

If a movie actor breaks his mirror he is sure to be most unhappy until he gets another one.

If you drop a knife or fork while setting the table some one is certainly coming to dinner. Otherwise you wouldn't be setting the table.

If the palm of your hand itches you are going to get money. People with itching palms make a point of getting it.

We are not sure that spilling salt will precipitate a fight, but you can count on one if you spill mustard or coffee.

And it is probable that more fights beans than by any other reason.

It is generally unlucky to speculate in Wall street on a Friday. Also on a Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

It is invariably a sign of bad luck to be run over by an automobile truck.

It is unlucky to open an umbrella in the house. The owner is apt to recognize it.

The bridesmaids at a wedding try to catch the bride's bouquet so as to be the next married. The maid of honor tries to catch the bridegroom's best man for the same reason.

The Remedy.

O'Sponge—"Do you ever have a feeling as if somebody was following you?"

Van Sport—"Nope, I always pay cash, you know."

Altogether Different.

Mrs. Van Nagg—"John, I suppose you men at the club run down everybody and everything under the sun."

Mr. Van Nagg—"Oh, no, a club is nothing like a sewing circle, my dear."

Putting Him Wise.

Hustling wife—"Why, from his wife,' of course."

Almost Achieved.

Amateur scientist—"What do you think comes the nearest to perpetual motion?"

Nervous father—"Oh, a 4-year-old boy."

What She Likes.

Montrose—"I like to see a girl with the gleam of love in her eye."

Millicent—"Yes, and with the gleam of love on her finger."

Toronto "Star" Article in Connection With Meeting Held in Toronto

"That threat has often been made before. I do not think it will materialize," stated Charles H. Collins, president of the Toronto Men's Liberal Association to The Star to-day, regarding the statement of members of the Central Liberal Association that they intend to run independent Liberal candidates against the "official" Liberal candidates in all Toronto ridings at the next election.

Discussing the published report that at a meeting at the Ontario Club on Wednesday night, presided over by Hon. G. N. Gordon, members of both associations had met and failed to settle their differences, and that the meeting was "the wildest conference held in Toronto in many a day," Mr. Collins stated:

"The report is true that there was a meeting at the Ontario Club but at that meeting there was no quarrelling and no personalities indulged in, and while we did not and could not agree on plans, we left the club together without any personal feelings as far as I could see."

Nothing to do but dig sand and walk in circles is a poor affair for a little cub, so I proposed some bread and butter with sugar on it. One little taste and that cub cried like a child for more. So we cut it into squares to be given to the cub and passed it around. To the delight of the parents and my own confusion, all the children, who are French and did not understand me, ate up their squares of bread and sugar, leaving not a trace for the bear.

Now, we made more bread and sugar, which I gave to the bear as a starter for the children, and the little fellow was making lots of fun when a boy came running down the road and informed us that he had seen the mother on the lake shore, sitting on her hind quarters and looking all around, and that she acted as though she would come our way, and even as he spoke she appeared over the edge of the slight rise in the land.

There was instant confusion, all in French except my own thoughts, which were in no shape to be put into understandable form. I began to look for a safe retreat, and, from all the noise in French, it seemed to me to be about like this: "Women grab your children, men grab your guns, the bear is coming to grab her little one."

And why shouldn't she grab her child from harm, just as we would protect ours? Eh? Answer that!

Men appeared with guns, ready to protect us all and save the cub from its own mother.

By this time, two or three men and several mothers decided that a knife to cut the leather collar on the cub's neck would be a far more popular method of being heroic, and before the fast coming mother bear could prevent it, one man stepped into the ring and cut the strap from the young bear's neck, then everyone left the place. That is, the few who had remained left.

I must confess that I was inside looking out, for I was upstairs in the house, looking out the window.

The mother bear lost no time in greeting her cub and in telling it what a fool it had been.

A few grunts and whines and cuffs about the ears and they were off to the nearby woods.

And just before entering the woods, the younger one stopped, sat on its haunches and scratched its neck in good shape, doubtless glad to be free of that irritating strap. The delay seemed to annoy the mother, for she gave it a playful or scoldful whack on the shoulder, which sent it rolling. Then they disappeared.

And all the way across the lake the rattle of that motor on the swampy boat was mixed with Excelsior's conversation, the only part of which I could make out being the phrase, "Oh, yes, and I remember—," and the rest was beyond me. I will ask him to talk again, when he can talk slower.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner o f Health, New York City.

WHAT TO DO IF BABY DISLIKES EATING

There are many things about a baby which the mother is not expected to know. I read of a mother who just presented her husband with a twenty-second child and all are living! That mother must know an awful lot about babies. But the average mother cannot be expected to recognize every sign of approaching trouble, or to properly analyze the significance of every symptom.

To a trained observer the scales, the skin, the eyes and the temper tell everything about a baby. They mean little to the mother. She is often in doubt.

Whenever the mother suspects something is wrong, but does not know just what it is, she should consult the doctor or go to a baby health station for advice. It is not well to delay, because the welfare, and, perhaps, the life of the little one depends on the right care, applied early. Loss of appetite, particularly, is one of the symptoms which should not be overlooked.

You cannot be governed in your opinion of the child wholly by the appetite of the baby. There may be loss of weight from loss of appetite, with refusal of food. There may be loss of weight from indigestion due to the indulgence of an over-stimulated appetite. A ravenous appetite may be due to abnormal conditions. In short, then, the appetite is not a positive sign of health or of the lack of health.

Failure of the baby to take his food may be due to one of several causes.

A sore throat or a sore mouth may be the cause. It hurts to swallow or it hurts to feed. Naturally, the infant declines to eat because he is in pain when he attempts it. The delicate tissues may be injured by something the baby has put in his mouth, or, if he has reached that age, there may be intense soreness of the gums from teething.

Probably the most common cause of lost appetite is wrong feeding. By this I mean the feeding of the wrong food or giving too much of the right food. Both are common faults.

Perhaps the most frequent mistake in infant feeding is the giving of a mixture too strong in its milk content. Reducing the amount of milk and sugar or giving less top milk may speedily restore the appetite.

This is a very general statement, of course. It must not be considered as anywhere near infallible. Instead of acting on your own account, it is better in every case to consult your doctor and follow the advice he gives after a personal examination of the child.

Another piece of general advice is to cut down the number of feedings, increasing the interval between them. You know you have no appetite if your meals are too close together. It is the same with a baby.

Acting on these suggestions will be likely to increase the appetite and prepare the child for a richer mixture and a larger quantity of food. But don't neglect to seek your doctor's advice if the trouble does not yield promptly. It is much easier for him to bring about speedy relief if he is called early. It is, indeed, true of baby's ailments that "a stitch in time saves nine."

SOLUTION OF CROSS-WORD PUZZLE IN LAST ISSUE.

YOUR GARDEN

NATURALIZING BULBS.

In buying your bulbs at the seed store this fall or ordering them, think over the possibilities of planting a few in natural surroundings and buy a number extra. A place, not too shaded but possibly among trees, where the grass or other vegetation can be left to grow until the tops have thoroughly ripened down, should be chosen. This is necessary as if the tops are cut while green the bulbs will not have the vitality to carry on and increase naturally.

If one attempts to plant in groups the bulbs are liable to look a little stiff until one has had practice. A good way is to scatter the bulbs by the handful on the ground and then dibble them in just as they group themselves. They will then have the appearance of just happening there. If one studies natural groupings one will find dense masses here, more scattered clumps there, and a few individual specimens or very small groups connecting up the whole as it were. This is the effect one should aim at.

Planting depths will appear in a latter article and under natural conditions distances are irregular and not so important.

Crocus, Narcissi of all kinds, Grape Hyacinths, Squills and Snowdrops lend themselves very well to such treatment. Avoid, however, any stiff, formal growing bulbs as the Hyacinths for they do not seem to fit.

Even quite a small area with only a dozen or two bulbs devoted to naturalizing will prove a source of delight and interest in the spring. Such a planting will last for years if as mentioned the grass is not cut too early and the bulbs are allowed to ripen naturally. It should be renewed though at any time the bulbs show signs of deterioration in small blooms or lack of an abundance.

marbles there isn't such a thing as—,' began David when a tiny laugh stopped him.. There stood Happy Giggles ,the wee little elfin from Makebelieve Land smiling from the top step of the porch.

"Wait a second before you go to betting anything so precious as your bag of marbles,' laughed the elfin. "Dee is right. There is a soup made from birds nests. But not the kind of birds nests you find out in the orchards around here. I'll tell you one of those very nests." David and Dee closed their eyes and when they opened them again Happy Giggles told them they were in China.

"Now See those birds?" asked Happy Giggles, pointing to some birds on the side of a steep cliff. "Well, those are called esculent Swallows, and they are the birds that build edible nests. When Mrs. Esculent Swallow builds her nest, the gland under her tongue begins to swell and from this swelling comes a sticky fluid. She presses her tongue, which answers to the spinnerets of the spider, against the rock that she intends to fasten her nest to, then going back and forth she draws out a long gummy thread. This sticky thread dries as soon as the air touches it and with it Mrs. Esculent Swallow forms a web or nest about the size and shape of a hen's egg cut lengthwise. When the nest is completed it will be as white and clean as can be, and from such nests the Chinese make what they call bird's nest soup.

Just then two Chinese came up. One of them held a long, four-pronged spear with a lighted candle on the end of it. The other man had a bag tied to his waist. They fixed a thin ratten ladder up against the rocks. The man with the pronged spear climbed the ladder off the birds' nest and handed and with his pronged spear twisted them to the other fellow, who put them into the bag at his waist.

"Now those nests will be packed about forty nests to the bundle and sold," whispered Happy Giggles. "And each bundle will bring at least nine or ten dollars. Esculent Swallows biuld about three nests a season, so they are plenty for all."

"Well, of all things,' drawled David. "I never should have believed it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes .

"I knew Mother knew what she was talking about," laughed Dee. "And we thank you." But when she turn around Happy Giggles had disappeared and she and Donald sat on their own porch.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

SUNDAY AND MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 13-14

Sunday's astrological forecast is for a rather sudden change or journey. The health may incline to a feverish condition, as well as the temper, and there may be discord or strife in the household. Avoid litigation.

Those whose birthday it is may may have an eventful year, with advantageous change or travel, which should not be negatived by ill temper or litigation. Cherish domestic harmony. A child born on this day may be quick, rash and headstrong, as well as changeable.

Monday's horoscope is a rather unfavorable one, betokening disappointments and losses. Change and travel should be avoided and those in the employement of others should be careful not to give offence.

Those whose birthday it is should plan a quiet year as change and travel would not bring benefits. Those in the employment of others should be careful of their positions.

A child born on this day should be equipped to overcome many obstacles in life, which it may surmount by tenacity of purpose and careful attention to advantages in hand.

SYNOPSIS

Jim Fowler, mail clerk, returns to his home in Crater City, after his run, to find that his wife has died in giving birth to a boy. Crushed, he wanders out into the storm. Bob Wilson, a young tramp, who had prevented the wreck of the Limited, and whom Jim brought home with him, follows him into the night. Jim, plodding aimlessly comes to the edge of a cliff, but Bob draws him back just in time. For hours the two tramp over hills and fields, one following the other to shield him from danger.

After long, long hours of blackness and turmoil the wind and the rain died and the night prepared to take a comparatively serene departure from a dripping world. But the subsidence of the storm brought neither certitude nor peace to Jim, nor rest to Bob.

They were passing grotesquely along the rim of one of the innumerable little craters that pock-marked the face of the earth—like the magnified complexion of the moon—in the wide strip of low hills and plateaus that flared out from Crater City in the manner of dried orange peels; Jim tragically erect, with bloodless face and stilted limbs; the hobo shambling after him, hands in pockets, shoulders hunched against the the bite in the air, but with brightly sleepless eyes.

The touch of a poet in Bob that had made him turn hobo when the material world went against him, kept recalling to his mind in a repetitious, far-off monotone Tennyson's lines "She must weep or she will die."

"She must weep or she will die—she must—he must weep or he will die—he must weep or he will die—"

The gender changed without Bob being aware of it. It added to the acute realism of the scene. Dully, the lines pounded in his head until his dragging feet kept time with them, and his lips silently and endlessly formed the mournful words.

For the first time since he had fled from his tragic cottage at midnight Jim Fowler's footsteps halted—suddenly, on the edge of a crater at a point where the slope of the saucer dropped abruptly in a cleft left by some forgotten cataclysm, a hundred feet or more; a sort of three-sided well, with a reckless jumble of broken and desiccated lava in the bottom.

Bob paused silently, at his elbow. Jim glanced at him and seemed to recognize him without curiosity as to how or why either of them got here. Such a look of pain contracted Jim's face spasmodically that Bob knew that the numbness of shock was passing and a clearing mind was bringing sharper pain, more deliberate and dangerous reactions. Bob tensed himself expectantly.

Not a sob—but a queer, dry-harsh gulp, as if a thick rope were being drawn up and down in his throat—oozed from Jim's tightened lips. He jumped, straight into the narrow slit of the crater well.

Bob caught him around the waist from behind as his feet left the ground swayed dangerously forward with his thrashing body for a few seconds for the strain on his own spent body was terrific, then finally, with a wrestler's side throw that flung both of them to the ground, wrenched him away from the first danger.

Jim fought like one possessed. Heavier, huskier, all around athlete as he was, Bob could do no more than barely keep his arms locked around Jim's body, and his face drawn down behind and between Jim's shoulder blade out of the way of his frantically tearing hands. Jim was slender, but strong with the dynamic strength of pent up emotions struggling to escape; Bob was husky, but weak with the exhaustion of twenty-four hours of ceaseless activity. Jim's fight, though in his frenzy he did not know it or realize at all what he was doing, was really with himself—his own stemmed agonies—rather than with his physical adversary. It made him a more dangerous fighter, because he was so intent upon jerking free and carrying out his intent to throw himself to destruction on the jagged crater floor below that he stopped at nothing. He tried to roll over on Bob, then to crush him on the rocky ledge; failing that, he tried to bend over far enough to bite Bob's hands, but Bob fighting desperately held him so tight that he could not get the necessary freedom of movement. Finally he seized up a jagged lava rock and tried to reach around and skull Bob with it.

Nearer and nearer to Bob's head the desperate lunges of the rock dagger came. Bob felt his strength going; he could never subdue this grief maddened man, he knew; he could not even now expect to hold his own. Jim was working freer and freer—turning, turning.

Then in the overexertion of his own bodily strength came the saving crack in the dam that held back Jim's grief, for after one vicious blow which almost grazed Bob's head Jim suddenly went limp in a storm of sobs.

Bob, with a gasp of relief, let his hands slip from Jim's body and relaxed, flat on his back, panting and staring affectionately into Jim's unrestrained eyes.

"Oh, why, why didn't you let me jump—" Jim wept, and Bob saw in the general relaxation that brought the tears that the danger of his destroying himself was passed, for this time at least.

"Why didn't you let me jump? Why didn't you let the Limited hit that boulder last night?" Sobs melted away the last barriers of the embargo on his emotions; his unloosed misery was swift, torrential. "I thanked you for saving me for the happiest event in My Dearest's life—and—and—what you really did save me for—was hell—"

For many minutes, while the daylight came, there was no sound on this lonely crag but the raging grief of the one man, and the labored breathing of the wearied other. Presently Bob got heavily to his feet, then put his hands under Jim's arms and drew him erect."

"Come, let's go back!"

"No! No!" half staggering, half wrenching away. "I can't—I can't—I don't want to go down—there—to see that—" Jim's grief was choked with rage against the baby who had caused it.

"But there are certain things—to be done—" Bob paused dubiously; then, like a gentle prod to bend the grief-crazed man to his clearer will, he reminded in a low and humbly sympathetic tone, "You cannot leave her—to strangers!"

A grasp, and a quick, startled glance that bore the full, concentrated burden of his woe; then, with his eyes closed and his chin resting on his bosom, down which his tears coursed steadily, Jim suffered himself to be led stumbling along by the unkempt hobo, whose general appearance of disreputability had been increased by the inner and outer physical strains and wear of the night.

An unimpeded view of the town, standing washed and unclothed in the early morning light, guided Bob in his general approach; but it took nearly an hour of steady walking before they had drawn close enough for him to pick out Jim's cottage from the vague decollective picture he had of it in the darkness, combined with a fine instinct for directions and places. Soon he had brought the weeping, unseeing Jim to his very front door. A thin wail filtering out from inside repulsed Jim from the doorstep as effectually as a blow from a door slammed in his face.

"No—no—" he sobbed, "I'm not going in—I don't ever want to see—to touch—it——"

"Never mind the baby," counseled Bob soberly. "You've come here to take care of—your dead——"

BRIGHTON SCHOOL FAIR

ORLAND, Sept. 12.—The Brighton Township School Fair was not so well attended as on former occasions, but this could not be laid as a charge against the weather man, for the day was all that could be asked.

It was, however, unfortunate that it was necessary to have held the air at such an early date as farmers are at their busiest and the C.N.E. is in full swing, nevertheless the young folks were very enthusiastic and everything passed off most harmoniously.

The exhibits were excellent and there were many contestants in most of the lines, while a few went almost begging, one in particular being in the floral show, while some parts of this latter was over crowded.

Most of the schools participated in the drill, the most noticeable absentee being S. S. No. 20, Orland, which on two former occasions won the Trophy, and at another time was crowded to second place by a very narrow margin.

The sparseness of livestock was another surprise but the few that were shown will compare favorably with any of their kind that may be shown at the County Fair.

The skill of the little Misses in Domestic Science is another feature which leaves no doubt but the future housewife will not bring discredit on their mothers.

The following list of successful pupils does not by any means cover all the exhibitors, and it further shows the varied channels that the department is endeavoring to turn the younger generations to be proficient in.

CHILDREN SING

There were only four entries in the children's flower parade, sponsored by the Kiwanis Club, which gave a prize to each entrant. Judges were Mrs. J. W. Fraser, Mrs. Jas. W. Gordon and Miss Rannie. Cash awards went in the following order (1st) Joyce Harris, 478 Donegal St., ($3) dressed as a green pea; (2nd) Phyllis Harris, 478 Donegal Street, ($2.00) asa lily; (3rd) Anna Edmondson, 365 Donegal street ($1.50) as a pumpkin, and (4th) E. Edmondson, 465 Donegal Street ($1.00) as a corn cob. The children's' costumes were prettily and ingeniously contrived from colored, frilled paper.

Very interesting talks on floriculture were given later in evening by Joseph Grierson, of East City, and Mr. A. E. Prest, 242 Lansdowne Street.

The presentation of prizes won in the recent lawn and garden competition was made by Dr. J. E. Middleton, president of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, the T. E. Bradburn cup going to Mrs. W. Wood, Pearl Avenue, who also takes the A W. Cressman cup for the same time. The cup donated this year by R. W. Cormack, to become the property of the successful winner in three years competitions, for the amateur exhibitor at the Flower Show with the greatest aggregate score, was won by J. Howland, 269 Burnham Street.

Two special cash prizes in gladioli section, for $2.50 and $1.00 donated by Mr. W. H. Young, 592 Chamberlain Street, were won by Mr A. E. Prest, 242 Landsdowne Street, and Mr. W. J. Smith, 311 Mark St. Mr. Young, on invitation of Dr. Middleton, presented these awards last night.

Mr. F. Stinson, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was in receipt yesterday of a telegram of good wishes from Mr. R. W. Cormack, in Fort Dodge, Iowa Mr. Cormack, the former president of the society, still takes an active interest in its welfare

At the conclusion of the evening's programme a sale of flowers was made by several of the florists.

The first Davis Cup matches were held in 1900, between Britain and America. The British sent over a team made up of A. W. Gore, E. D. Black and H. Roper-Barrett. America's players were Malcolm D. Whitman, Holcombe Ward and the donor of the trophy, Dwight F. Davis. Whitman beat Gore and Davis defeated Black the opening day at Longwood, and on the following day Gore and Black succumbed to Ward and Davis, then the American champions. The matches on the third day were stopped by rain, and the Englishmen let them go by because they were already beaten and had to sail for home.

Alfred Mace, eldest son of Jem Mace, one of Britain's most famous boxing champions, has found a calling far removed from the prize-ring. He is a revivalist preacher, and a member of a strict Nonconformist sect.

SHARKS PURSUED FLOATING PLANE

Rolled Around Waiting For a Meal During Whole Period.

CREDIT TO OFFICER.

HONOLULU, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—Sharks—buzzards of the sea—rolled and wallowed round and round the plane following the floating 9 No. 1 with its crew for most of the more than 218 hours that they drifted, it was revealed in the talks of the three enlisted men who gave to their commander credit for the indominable spirit and never-say-die attitude which brought them safely through.

"Yes, there were sharks, big black fellows, that followed day after day, waiting, I suppose, for a choice bit of human flesh," said William R. Bowlin, aviation chief machinist's mate, and the other two chimed assent.

TRIBESMEN RETREAT

The converging wings of Marshall Petain's 150,000 men met little resistance as they advanced after heavy shell fire. Artillery and airplane bombardment preceded the advance along the entire 60 kilometer front, minimizing the French casualties, which are reported to have been slight. Petain was cautious, for public opinion in France will not stand big losses.

Must Dig in Troops.

The battle for possession of Tetuan has forced General Primo De Rivera to dig in his 16,000 troops at Alhucemas Bay and renounce for the present the attack on Ajdir. He has left his command to Gen... Sanjurjo and hurried back to Tetuan, wher the Djebala and Andjera tribesmen under leadership of Abd-El-Krim's brother threaten to force the Spaniards back to the sea. The Andjeras, who occupy the territory leading from Tangier to Tetuan—the portion of Africa nearest Spain—have after many months' neutrality poined the Riffians and put the Spaniards back into the same position as when they were forced to retreat last winter.

The two tribes alone have forced the Spaniards into a general defensive, giving Abd-IKrim for a moment the advantage. It became know to-day that the second Spanish landing on Alhucemas Bay, which was reported to have occurred at Quilans, was called off at the last moment on account of the seriousness of the attack against Tetuan.

Wabasso Cottons are Canada's best

Why "Wabasso" Cottons?

"Wabasso" is the Ojibway Indian word for White Snowshoe Rabbit, and Wabasso Cottons are just as fleecily soft and snowily white as the fur of the White Snowshoe Rabbit after which they are named.

Behind the Wabasso trade mark is an organization of 2,000 skilled workers whose daily lives are devoted to the ideal of turning out cottons that will excel all others. To help them accomplish this end, they are given the choicest raw cottons from Egypt, from the Southern States, from the South Sea Islands; and they work with machinery and equipment only equalled by that in the finest Old Country Mills.

And their ideal is achieved. The Wabasso Cotton Company has won for itself a reputation second to none among the cotton mills of the whole world—its products are the finest that ever gladdened the hearts of Canadian women.

Whatever your need—whatever you look for in quality, beauty and wear—the Wabasso trade mark guarantees you complete and thorough satisfaction.

SEPTEMBER

By Juanita Hammel

September! The harvest time of the earth's bounty. When Nature fulfills the rich promises she has made during the spring and summer, when the whole world is at its best!

Even the moon seem to imbibe the spirit of harvest and seems richer and nearer. Instead of her usual pals, silvery beams, she sheds a rich golden glow over the fullness and glory of old Mother Earth. Even love waits 'till now to reap the harvest of his activities. And what can be a more perfect setting for love's song than the moonlight of a September night.

A FASHION MODEL'S DIARY

By Grace Thorncliffe

SHE DESCRIBES A YOUTHFUL EVENING GOWN.

Madame has been making a large number of both lace and net frocks. Today she sent for me to try on a new one.

"Is this to be a big season for frocks of this type?" I asked her.

Madame paused to move a pin from one position in the new frock to another and answered:

"All my clients who have come back from spending the summer abroad seem to have a regular craze for frocks of the lacy and net type."

"Were they worn much when you were abroad early in the summer?" I asked.

"Yes," Madame answered. "They were just beginning to come in then, and I knew that meant we would have a good fall season on frocks of the net and lace variety."

"No matter what people say, it seems to me the new fashions begin abroad and sweep in this direction," I commented.

"It is true that many new fads are started abroad," Madame agreed. "A thing that starts there and is very new always takes a certain length of time to appear here, though it is remarkable how quickly the fashions spread."

"This is a very smart-looking frock," I said, referring to the mauve net embroidered in gold which I had donned and which Madame was viewing from all angles with a critical eye. She always supervises the making of every frock that is turned out in her establishment.

"I wanted particularly to get the effect of the mauve net over the ashes of roses slip," Madame said. "And I am well pleased with the result of the combination."

"Isn't ashes of roses considered a very smart shade?" I queried.

"It's one of the best." Madame answered. Then she added:

"The French are showing marked favor for the shade they call 'bois de rose.'"

"Exactly how would you describe that shade?" I asked, for I am always eager to be well up on the latest fashion points.

Madame thought a second and then said:

"It's much like nude with a decided cast of red to it."

With this she pinned a cluster of gold flowers at the hip of the frock and signalled to the seamstress to catch them exactly as she had pinned them.

Then she pronounced the model finished and had it sent down to the manikins' room.

Fashion Ideas

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—(United Press).—At present one sees such quantities of lace frocks that is might be well to describe a model which might assist one in remodeling an old lace frock or in fashion a new one. This particular model, of black silk filet lace, is shown among the Parisian imports.

The bodice is straight-lined, round as to neck and short sleeved. The waistline is low on the hips. Both bodice and slender skirt are of lace, the skirt using four circular godets of black chiffon covered with tiny pecoted ruffles, at the side fronts and backs. The wee ruffles are mounted on three-cornered godets of plain chiffon and the godets are then tacked to the lace beginning just below the hipline.

The godet begins at a point and is cut very circular at the bottom and when covered with full ruffles adds a fluffy effect to the slender lace skirt. On the left shoulder a huge rose of pecot-edged chiffon is worn. A draped sash of chiffon finishes the waistline. Peach colored silk-back crepe acts as an underslip.

Almost any slender-lined gown of sheer material can be made full at the hem by using godets of chiffon ruffles. At present one sees velvet godets placed on skirts of cloth frocks. In one case the velvet is carried out on the cuffs, collar and vestee of a frock as well as on godets. Thus an old gown can be remodeled into a this season's model.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of twenty and have been keeping company for six months with a young man eight years my senior. Do you think he is too old for me? So far I have not allowed him to embrace or kiss me and have not taken his attentions seriously, as I did not know whether it was in order to allow one of his age to become too affectionate.

He is not as tall as I and does not look one bit older. Do you think it all right for me to continue keeping company with him, as I feel sure that he is serious in his attentions towards me. He holds a good position and is well able to provide a good home for me should it come to marriage. He has no bad habits, is very quiet and takes life more seriously than I do. He is very bashful, does not dance nor care for social gatherings and prefers to be with me alone, whereas I am very fond of dancing, etc.

He is very kind to me and is very highly spoken of by all who know him and should make an ideal husband.

If you think it proper for me to allow him to press his attentions towards me would it be all right to allow him to kiss me now; also should I permit him to do so every night we are together or only once in a while? How many nights a week should I go out with him?

BRUNETTE.

BRUNETTE: I know this is a flapper age, Brunette, but still I can't, for the life of me, consider a man of twenty-eight years of age as so very old. The solicitude you express in your first paragraph with regard to allowing "one of his age to become too affectionate" is somewhat amusing. The chances are that the young man, if he is all you say, is really much too good for a modern girl of twenty, who knows very litte about the real things of life.

You do not say anything about love. Probably you don't think love on your part is necessary, or do you think it will grow if you start "petting." Love is supposed to grow by what it feeds on.

I don't think you would make any serious mistake by attaching yourself to this young man. He appears to be a very nice sort.

Yes, I think you might let him kiss you—once in a while. George Ade, in one of his inimitable fables, tells of a young man who was very fond of quail on toast. After eating it every day for a month he grew tired of the dainty altogether. And perfume applied with an atomizer may also become distasteful in time. See the point?

How many nights a week should you go out with him? That depends. Would two nights be enough, with Sunday considered an extra? Or, if the young man is bashful, as you say, and likes to be with you, I think you might safely extend the number of evenings, just so that your mutual conversational powers can stand the strain. A young man such as you describe, and a young lady who has been going out with him for six months and has not permitted him to kiss her yet, a very commendable and extraordinary record, should make a very happy couple, and I would like to know how your affair progresses.

WOMAN JUDGE IS FIRST OF SEX IN WEST COURT

Sits in Drab Court Room and Metes Out Justice.

NOT WOMAN LAWYER.

Has Married Daughter and Calls Herself Grandmother.

Los Angeles.

Georgia Phillips Bullock is the first woman Police Judge in the West. She sits in a Los Angeles court, and the city is proud of her. While most of the offenders coming before Judge Bullock are members of her own sex, her court is not known as a women's court. These among other types of cases appear almost daily on Judge Bullock's dockets: Petty larcency, intoxication, vagrancy, prostitution, drug addicts, possession of narcotics and "failing to provide" cases.

Hers is a drab court room, devoid of sufficient light or air. No pictures enliven the faded walls. Other than a case of fresh blossoms that stands on Judge Georgia's desk, there is no suggestion of femininity. Those who enter Judge Bullock's court room expecting to find enthroned a mannish person are disappointed. Instead they find a decidedly feminine person, dressed in the mode, dignified, attractive. Judge Georgia's costume for the bench is always carefully chosen. Because of her fair complexion, blue eyes and light brown hair she rather favors a shade of brown.

Does the first woman Police Judge in the West favor female offenders? Does she shed a tear as she listens to the story of a young wife who between sobs tells how her husband left home without providing for their three small children? Does she sympathize with the unfortunate woman of the streets who llays bare the secrets of her inmost soul telling how she got started on the downward path? No—this woman who presides over one of Los Angeles's busiest Police Courts is not one who might be termed "hard-boiled," but she metes out decisions as any male Judge would do, eliminating merely feminine views.

"Lawyer," Not "Woman Lawyer."

Judge Bullock remarked the other day that, though now some are on the bench, twenty-five years ago there were very few women at the bar. It was in 1899 that woman practicing law in New York City and adjacent cities in New Jersey and Connecticut met in the office of one Edith Griswold and organized a Women Lawyers' Club. Nine years later this club became the Women Lawyers' Association. About two years ago the constitution of the association was changed, Mrs. Bullock said, and patterned after that of the American Bar Association. This is the only national women lawyers' organization in the world.

"A large number of the women lawyers in the organization are members of the American Bar Association," said Mrs. Bullock. "It invites women lawyers to join and makes us welcome. For years the American Bar Association existed without us, but we are going to show those men that the woman lawyer is here to stay. I believe that each year we are being given a bigger chance to demonstrate, alone, by co-operation and fellowship, our serious work in law."

Figures show that there are not more than 2,000 women at the bar in the United States to-day, while in New York City alone there are more than 10,000 men practicing law. Delaware has not a single woman at the bar; North Dakota has five, Louisiana has less than a dozen and the State of Alabama about twenty women lawyers. California, Illinois, New York (State) and the District of Columbia aggregate something over 1,000. Judge Bullock said that she believed the day was not far off when women in law will be known as "lawyers" instead of "women lawyers."

Sees Reluctant Bridegroom.

"Inherent in a woman one may find almost every quality displayed by a good lawyer, and I do not think there is a single branch of the legal profession in which a woman cannot succeed," she said. "A sex distinction in law is absurd. The interests of men and women can never be totally separated. To my way of thinking, this world is no more man's than woman's, and I see no reason why women are not equipped as well mentally for making important decisions from the bench as are men."

An interesting observation made by Judge Bullock is that in all marriage ceremonies in which she has officiated the bridegroom has appeared nervous, seemingly not quite sure that he wished to go through with the thing. Whereas, Judge Bullock said, the brides, to the last one of them, made their responses with decision and in an audible manner. The Judge said she felt that the same bridegrooms would have responded in the same manner had a male Judge been performing the ceremony. "They weren't afraid of me—they just weren't sure whether they wanted to get married."

Music, to this first woman Police Judge in the West, means more than any influence outside her own family personnel. It is seldom that one finds a legal mind tending toward things artistic—although there was the case of the late Chief Justice White, who liked the violin. To Judge Georgia Bullock music is one of the greatest joys in life. When she was 17 a famous vocal teacher went to her family with an offer of three years' training for her in voice culture, without cost, if Mrs. Bullock's family would at the end of that period allow her to go on the concert stage and sign a contract to that effect.

Son in Music Box Revue.

But the Judge's parents objected and she acquiesced to their wishes. One of Judge Bullock's favorite pastimes is opera. Each year she makes a special trip to New York to hear new things offered at the Metropolitan.

Since she was not enabled to follow her bent toward the concert stage, the Judge decided not to interfere with any desire her son, Wynne, now 20, might have to follow a musical career. Wynne Bullock is at present a singer in New York. Aside from singing eight times each week, young Bullock spends part of each day attending law classes at Columbia. The Judge, his mother, is no different from any other mother in that she believes in her boy and looks forward to the day when he will have made a national reputation, either on the stage or in law.

Judge Bullock has a married daughter and proudly refers to herself as "grandmother." Her native city is Chicago. She attended Von Ende's Private School, Lake View High School and Chicago Musical College, later going to St. Mary's Academy at Notre Dame, Ind. Her grandfather was Welsh, and when she was of school age she went abroad with her family and attended for two years the Archdeacon's School for Girls at Swansea, Wales. She married at 19, and she did not take up the study of law until her daughter and son were well along in school. In 1913 she received her LL. B. from the University of Southern California.

BRITISH FEEL RUBBER PINCH

Country's Scheme to Control Production Has Kick-Back —Car Owners Suffer.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—British motorists themselves are getting sick of Great Britain's domination of the rubber production of the world. The reason is that the 1,500,000 British subjects who are owners of motor vehicles are being bled several million dollars annually as a result of restrictions placed upon rubber production by the British government.

It is acknowledged freely that the present rubber shortage which is responsible for boosting the price of crude rubber about 250 per cent within the last three months, is the result of the so-called "Stevenson scheme" restricting the exportation of rubber from the Straits bettlements and Ceylon. This ordinance had the approval of the British Colonial office.

Stocks of rubber in London are falling off rapidly. There is more demand for rubber in the United Kingdom now than when the Stevenson scheme was conceived. British motor industry is flourishing. Especially the manufacturers of small cars are having difficulty in keeping up with their orders. Some are working three shifts and running night and day.

Supply Is Cut.

At the beginning of the year the stock of rubber in London was estimated at 28,000 tons. Now it is down to about 4,000. It is not surprising that the government is besieged with petitions from manufacturing interests begging that the restriction upon production and exportation of rubber should be abolished.

A well-known manufacturer is quoted as saying:

"The British Empire formerly produced 75 per cent of the world's supply of rubber; now, because of the restriction upon export, its production has sunk to hardly five per cent of the demand. There is a British manufacturing company that owns 75,000 acres of rubber plantation, but it is not allowed to tap its own rubber. Accordingly, it has to go into the open market and buy rubber produced by Dutch growers and pay extortionate prices."

Losing Trade.

There are two effects of these conditions which the British people do not like; one is that London is being robbed of its name as the world's trading center in rubber; the other is that a good deal of adverse criticism in other countries, and particularly in the United States is coming to be felt here.

Meanwhile it is not apparent where an adequate supply of rubber for the coming year is to be found, and it is certain that the price must be more than double that of last year. This is reflected in two recent announcements of advances in the price of tires made by British concerns.

It is estimated that rubber can be produced on most of the plantations at a cost of about 16 to 18 cents a pound. Allowing for every contingency, a price of 30 to 35 Ients a pound would give handsome profits to the growers. But the present price of rubber is above $1. Such conditions are certain to increase the unrest among British manufacturers and consumers.

TWO TOWNS CLAIM FAMOUS COMPOSER

Oxford and Cambridge Both Say Orlando Gibbons Was Native.

OXFORD, Eng., Sept. 12.—(Associated Press.) — The tercentenary of Orlando Gibbons, one of the most famous of Tudor musicians and composers, has revived the old claims which both Oxford and Cambridge make as his native town.

It has long been known that Gibbons became a chorister at King's Chapel, Cambridge, at the age of 12, and that Cambridge gave him a degree in music when, at the age of 21, he became organist to the Chapel Royal, and these facts were taken as disproving the Oxford claim. By accident a chance searcher in the records of the City Church of Oxford has found an entry of the baptism of Orlando Gibbons under date of December 25, 1583, and as the name is no usual one it seems certain that the entry refers to the great church composer.

In his own time Gibbons was known more as an organist than as a composer, for he had "the best hand in England." His compositions are few, but they are declared unsurpassed in dignity, propriety and beauty. His anthems, "Oh, Clap Your Hands," "Hosanna" and "Almighty and Everlasting," and his madrigals, "The Silver Swan" and "Oh, That the Learned Poets," are regarded the high points of the ancient, simple and musical art of England.

IRISH FARMERS JOKE VICTIMS

Received Letters Asking Them to Come to Boundary Meeting.

LETTERS WERE FAKES

BELFAST, Sept. 12 (Associated Press).—Farmers on both sides of the Tyrone-Donegal border have been the victims of a boundary commission hoax. Letters which had been posted in Strabane summoned them to a meeting to give evidence regarding the proposed transference of this particular district and instructing them to prepare a statement giving particulars bearing on the question.

All sades of politics were represented in those getting communications and the recipients, foolscap sheets in hand, flocked into Strabane on the appointed day. They were greatly surprised to discover there was no one at the Town Hall to receive them and it then dawned upon them that they had been hoaxed. They rapidly disappeared and their explanation to their friends was that their visit to Strabane was connected with something entirely different.

CITY SEEKS COP OF INTELLECT TO COPE WITH CROOK

Philadelphia Will Adopt New Standard for Prospective Police.

CRIMINALS KEEN

New Beaks Must Pass Through Tests on Hypothetical Cases.

PHILADELPHIA, September 12. Brains, more than physical prowess, will be sought hereafter in recruits for the Philadelphia police department under a recent ruling of the Civil Service Commission. The decision, announced after investigations the commission and Director of Public Safety Smedley D. Butler, will become effective with the next batch by commission and Director of Pub-

Criminals are keen-witted and quick thinking policemen are needed to keep abreast of them, the commission said. A new code of tests for prospective blue coats will be put into practice, designed, as far as practicable, to "predict the efficiency of a policeman."

Under the old system a candidate was given three points for physical qualification, three for training and experience, and one each for practical questions, observation and personal interview. The revised code will rank physical qualifications at two points; training and experience, two and one half; practical questions two; personal interview two and one-half.

Most important the new code will measure the prospective policeman's thinking ability. Hypothetical situations will be sketched and the candidate asked to state his actions under each condition. He will be graded accordingly.

QUEEN MARIE GETS BARDIC TITLE

Over 15,000 people accorded an enthusiastic reception to Queen Marie of Roumania upon occasion when she was invested with the bardic title of Marie Gwalia (Mary of Wales) during the Welsh national Eisteddfod recently held at Pwilheli, Wales. Queen Marie is seen holding a bouquet of roses and attired in her bardic robes. Next to her, and wearing a robe of darker color is Dame Margaret Lloyd Geoge. The others in the illustration were the Welsh officials who performed the rites.

Toronto Trading Falls But Market Closes Firm

TORONTO, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press). — Trading continued on a less active scale on the Toronto Stock Market this morning, but the market closed the week with a generally firm tone. Barcelona and Brazilian were the leaders, the former advancing a quarter at 24, while Brazilian receded a half to 71 3-4. Steamships preferred strengthened a point at 49 1-4, Davies a half, Bell Telephone three quarters, and Canadian Canners Preferred advanced half a point. Oil featured the unlisted section with an advance of 1 3-8.

Speculating For Rise On New York Market

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—Speculation for a rise continued unabated in to-day's brief session of the stock market. Easy money rates and favorable trade reports are brought forward to explain further appreciation in quoted values. Several new highs were recorded in the motor group, particularly by shares of so-called quantity producers. Increased demand for soft coal arising from the suspension of anthracite mining was reflected in the steady accumulation of Pittsburgh and West Virginia which crossed 81 to a record high.

American Can, duplicated the year's high of 243, but later fell back on profit-taking. The closing was strong. Total sales approximated 800,000 shares.

600,000 GERMANS ARE OUT OF WORK

Unemployment Increases, Threatening to Bring on Crisis.

BERLIN, Sept 12.—Germany's unemployed is increasing rapidly and is rapidly bringing on a crisis. And the industrialists are doing little to stem the tide.

Close to 600,000 laborers are without means of support to-day, while another 600,000 are working only two or three days weekly. Forty thousand textile workers at Munchen-Gladbach to-day received notice to quit on August 25 unless they agree to sweeping wage reductions. With the weekly increase in the unemployment in the Ruhr and other industrial centres this would bring the total close to 650,000.

The Labor Ministry has little hope of improving the situation before Winter. On the contrary, it is estimated by prominent officials that more than 700,000 will be jobless on the 1st of October, with many more working only two days a week.

The crisis finds it source first in the fact that the industrialists are unwilling to reorganize on a pre-war basis of profit-taking, and, second, the high price of money is making it impossible for the big factories to work at a profit with borrowed capital.

The industrialists seem content to let matters go hoping thereby to effect wage reductions. The leading economists of Germany have repeatedly pointed out that this is no permanent cure for industrial troubles. Until ready cash can be obtained for industry at rates permitting the big plants to resume capacity work the crisis will continue. The reichsbank discount rate to-day was 9 per cent and it promises to remain at that figure for many months. Firms like the Krupps and Thyssen are able to borrow money abroad at 7 per cent, but the average big German firm must pay twelve to the local banks, while the smaller firms are forced to obtain money by mortgages which call for as high as 18 per cent.

At such a cost it is impossible to produce at prices enabling Germany to compete in the world market. The adverse trade balance has been climbing from week to week since February 1. The coal miners and operators are still at a deadlock over wage reductions and the prospect of a lockout is not remote.

Through an invention reported from Germany a person riding in a moving automobile is enabled to talk by wireless telephone to a person riding in another car.

A shortage of skilled labor in Cleveland is reported.

Agriculture is the most important industry in China.

Frederick, Md., is the centre of the gold fish breeding industry.

SIDELIGHTS ON PEOPLE

Critics of Bernard Shaw have said almost all there is to say about him. But few, if any, ever suggested that he was mad.

Now this statement is put forward. And by no less an authority than Shaw himself. He qualifies his remark, however, by adding that we are all more or less off our balance.

"We are all mad, more or less," were his exact words, given during a recent address. If you knew everything about me that I know about myself, you would all get up and rush out of doors."

He was speaking about "nerves," taking the stand that no one knows anything about the condition at present referred to as "nerves" except that it very certainly has nothing whatever to do with nerves.

"Doctors know nothing about these things," he comments. "They call them nerves just as we do, but I suppose it is in order to flatter our ignorance."

When you say that a person's nerves are trained, he declares, what is really meant is that the character is trained.

"The problem of dealing with people's nerves is the problem of making them pleasant to live with. Most of us are not pleasant to live with, as we will all discover if we consult the people with whom we live.

"One of the terrible experiences of our lives to-day is to have lived through a really first class war. In that war everybody was frightened. For the first time in history, nobody pretended not to be frightened. In previous small wars, we had the convention that people concerned in it had no fear.

"Between the person who is a dangerous lunatic and the person with a fit of nerves, there is no fixed line where we can say a person is mad. The best thing that we can do is induce the persons affected to cure themselves."

Hidden away in a news report from the neighboring capital of Washington was this comedy of errors:

Someone, he remains anonymous, recognized on the streets of that great city the flashy automobile of a well-known Washington member of the bootlegging fraternity. This person, still anonymous, had had dealings with that particular bootlegger in the past and was disposed to continue the business relations. He hailed a taxi and rushed after the car.

Before he managed to catch up, the flashing motor drew up in front of a government building and the occupant was just about to step out when the taxi drew up alongside.

Leaning out of the taxi window, the anonymous one shouted to the driver of the car: "Can you send me up a case of Scotch to-day?"

The driver turned round and presented to the astounded customer the face of Roy Asa Haynes, prohibition commissioner for the great republic.

Mr. Haynes, it seems, had just taken advantage of a recent ruling which allows American agents in aid of dryness to make use of confiscated cars.

Now it is announced that the downfall of former Premier Briand of France in 1921 was due to the fact that he acquired the week-end habit. This habit, according to reports, is as contagious as measles or the giggles and the famous Frenchman developed it after visiting British statesmen. He played golf week-ends with Lloyd-George at Cannes just before the crash. He liked playing golf during the week-end and he continued to do it.

It seems absolutely necessary for people to have something to worry about and view with alarm. The undermining effect of week-ends is as good as anything else. The terrible habit of spending Sunday in the country is almost impossible to overcome. Despite his 1921 downfall Briand still does it.

During the present year 600 car-loads of Russian eggs will be imported into Germany, while next year the shipments will be increased to 2,000 carloads and in 1927 to 2,700 carloads.

REVOLUTIONARY BOOK

Vincente Blasco Ibanez has been summoned to appear before the military court at Salamanaca on a charge of publishing a booklet of revolutionary character. If he fails to appear he will be declared a rebel He refers to the king as "Alfonsito", a contemptuous diminutive, and calls him: "Mannequi king." "Alfonso", says Ibanez, "surrounds himself with generals who are rounders and humbugs and whose intellectual level is more or less like his own." King Alfonso is shown below, and Ibanez above him.

MEN WILL WEAR BRIGHT COLORS

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Sept. 12.—(Associated Press.)— A prediction that in the future men will bedeck themselves in raiment more brilliant than women was made here by Romain de Tirtoff Erte, late of Paris, who is designing sets and costumes for Hollywood moving picture studios.

Once the step is taken, the designer believes, men will wear vividly colored garments gracefully, and the "loud" suit or shirt will hardly be noticed in the street, while after dinner the conservative black evening clothes will change to view with the elaborate gowns of the women.

As authority for the prediction, Erte declared: "The male birds are plumed much more gadly than the female. Male animals are more beautifully coated — the Indian squaw is drably clothed compared with the brightness of her mate's feathers and blankets. And back in the prehistoric ages the made dress was more elaborate than that of the female."

LIFE ON MARS

CAMBRIDGE, England, September 12. — G. H. Hamilton of Trinity College, soon will present to the International Astronomical Union what he regards as conclusive evidence of the existence on Mars of sentient beings with a civilization of 90,000 years to their credit.

"My proofs are forthcoming," said Dr. Hamilton, recently, "that Mars is in the condition the earth is approaching—that is, a desert. Once it had seas, but they have disappeared. The mountains and the hills are gone. worn away by wind erosion. The canals are not ditches or water courses, as commonly supposed but vegetation on each side of conduits of water. These conduits are routes of travel for commerce and anything else."

More than 700 cities of the United States and Canada now have public playgrounds under organized leadership.

WOMEN BASE BALL FANS

(By H. I. Phillips.)

Scene: A big league ball park. Two women who boast that they "just love baseball" have taken seats well up with the male rooters. They are obviously crazy about the game so long as it doesn't interefere with their conversation.

First Inning.

"They must be beginning the game now . . . there's a batter up and he has just struck at a ball . . . I do hope he hits it . . . aren't the ones in the white uniforms cute? . . . Oh, Etta, I forgot to tell you about Mamie! . . . her husband's left her again . . . yes, they did fight terribly . . . I used to run over to see her until it got unbearable . . . He's such a grouch, you know . . . Ooo! . . . He hit it . . . No . . . struck out, I guess . . . Yes, three strikes . . . every time a batter is hit by a ball it counts a strike . . . it's something like a balk, I think . . . You don't mind if I explain the game to you, dear?

"Who's that up now . . . Number 3 . . . I never could follow anything on these programmes . . . Well, anyway, as I was saying, they've separated . . . too bad . . . she's a nice girl with a lovely disposition . . . Look! . . . Oh, it's a foul ball . . . What's he talking to the referee about . . . Oh, say, Etta, did I tell you about the lovely cretonne I got for 55 cents a yard . . . they're wonderful . . . I'm cutting my curtains . . . yes . . . making them myself . . . I'm doing the living room all over, you know . . . it's easy if you have an electric sewing machine . . . What's happened now? . . . they're changing sides. . . the first period must be over.

Along About Sixth Inning.

"The Yanks are batting now . . . or the Giants . . . or whatever team it is . . . I never can keep track of it . . . Huh? . . . What? . . . You don't mean it, Etta . . . The last I heard of her she said she was never going to raise a family . . . That makes three now, two boys and a girl . . . Yes, the little girls is the cutest child I ever saw and she's such a smart little tike.

Ninth Inning.

"Not if you don't go to extremes a rigid diet won't hurt you . . . I've taken off 11 pounds in six weeks . . . No butter or white bread or potatoes or anything like that . . . I don't believe in hot baths to take off weight . . . That's Eddie Cobb at bat now . . . He's one of the greatest players . . . almost as famous as Ty Collins . . . Oh, there are three on bases! . . . They've got the pitcher in a pit . . . I think that's what they call it . . . Isn't baseball exciting? . . . Do you know, Eetta, I've bought the loveliest leg of lamb and the cutest little spinach for dinner to-night . . . Do you like lamb? . . . I get the dearest meats at my butcher's . . . and so reasonable, too . . . Yes I adore salads but I can't stand them all the time . . . Why, everybody's getting up and leaving . . . What can be the matter? . . . You don't mean to tell me the game is over? . . . Well I was so interested listening to you, Etta, that I lost track of it . . . Isn't it just too funny for anything how you'll miss things at a ball game? Come let's hurry out."

PETERBORO' MEN WON AT COBOURG

Took Fourth Prize in Labor Day Bowling Tournament.

COBOURG, Sept. 12.—A Scotch doubles tournament took place at the local green on Monday. Owing to the heavy rain on Sunday the green was a little heavy, but it was well rolled in the morning and put in very good shape. Thirty-three rinks were here to take part in the tourney, those from outside coming from Peterboro, Warkworth, Campbellford, Belleville, Tweed, Bowmanville and Oshawa. The green was decorated with flags and presented a gala appearance. Each rink played four games. The winners of the five prizes offered were the highest plus score allowed. They were as follows:

First — Meyers and partner, Campbellford, 4 wins, plus score of 25.

Second—E. Thompson and W. H. Hopper, 4 wins, plus score of 18.

Third—F. Burg and F. J. Skitch, Cobourg, 3 wins, plus score of 18.

Fourth — Elliott and partner, Peterboro, 3 wins, plus score of 18.

(The two last named rinks were a tie and tossed a coin to decide which should have third place.)

Fifth—J. Parker and S. Throop, Cobourg, 3 wins, plus score of 17 allowed.

The first prizes were rugs; the second, brass hot water kettles; the third, silver-plated pie plates; the fourth, half dozen teaspoons; fifth, bedroom clocks.

The ladies of the Cobourg club served refreshments during the day.

This order is to be strictly adhered to all through the season.

LAKEFIELD WON SOFTBALL GAME

No Doubt at All About Final in Peterboro League Yesterday.

SCORE 24 TO 2

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 12—Lakefield won the final game of the East Peterboro Softball League when they triumphed over the Indian River lads by the conclusive score of 24 to 2. Lakfield Swatsmiths were invincible and the Indian defence had no protection against the downpour of base blows while they lacked the punch to launch a counter attack on Ridpaths' delivery.

Indian River boys went home, however, carrying with them the esteem of the Lakefield team which acknowledged them as an aggregation of dead game sports who insisted in playing the game to a finish rather than accept defeat lying down.

The line-up:

Score by innings:

Indian River .. .. ..1 0 0 0 1— 2
Lakefield .. ..2 11 4 5 2—24

INSIDE GOLF.

By CHESTER HORTON

Maker of 51 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

Callouses on the golfer's hands can tell him a lot about his game. Where should they be? I have been told that Bobby Jones has no callouses. Evans wears none. But most of the pros accumulate them at the base of the fingers. When you find them there you are O. K. with your clubs. But if you have them along the sides of your fingers something is wrong. The grip usually is too tight in the hand that grips where the callous occurs. Some players get these partly calloused and nearly always sore spots at points on the little fingers. This indicates that one of the hands is slipping at some point in the back swing—probably the right hand from gripping too tightly. Thick grips on the shafts do not cure this trouble. Thick grips should be avoided. They put weight at the wrong end of the shaft. If anything, make the grips thinner. The thinner it is the more the tendency to get the shaft in the fingers, where it belongs.

FRENCH TENNIS PAIR FADED IN DOUBLES ROUND

Williams and Richards Vanquished Borotra and Lacoste Yesterday.

INVADERS WEARY.

Faced Fresh American Combination in Davis Cup Match.

PHILADELPHIA, September 12. —Canadian Press. — United States' supremacy in the realm of international tennis is secure for another year.

The defenders clinched their hold on the Davis Cup, emblem of this supremacy, yesterday, when R. Morris Williams, captain of the United States' forces, teamed with the young New Yorker, Vincent Richards, to give France's gallant challengers, Jean Borotra and Rene Lacoste, their third straight and decisive defeat in the challenge round series.

Before a gallery of 8,000 fans at the Germantown Cricket Club, the United States pair, a new doubles combination in cup play, turned back the Frenchmen in straight sets,6-4, 6-4, 6-3, in a match that was one-sided in spite of the apparent closeness ot the scores.

Coupled with the singles triumphs Thursday of William T. Tilden over Borotra and William M. Johnston against Lacoste, it gave the defenders the three victories necessary to decide possession of the cup. The reing two singles matches Saturday with Tilden facing Lacoste and Johnston opposing Borotra, will be played as scheduled, but their outcome will have no effect on the championship.

Yesterday's triumph assured the United States her sixth successive seaso of Davis Cup supremacy. It was the ninth victory she has scored in twenty international tournaments, for the famous trophy since 1900.

France's plucky pair faced fresh oppositiion to-day in Williams and Richards and together they found it more difficult to solve than that which they encountered separately Thursday in the singles. The effect of these bitterly fought opening battles left its mark on the two invaders for neither was at his best except for occasional flashes, and they were beaten back in little more than an hour's play.

Against the superior team-work and steadiness of the American pair, Lacoste and Borotra fought a losing battle from the the start to finish. Richards and Williams broke through Borotra's service in the first game of the opening set and were never headed after that. They had to check several spectacular rallies by their foes, notably in the second set, when Borotra and Lacoste pulled up to four-five after trailing at 1-5, but the end was in sight. It came finally in the ninth game of the third set when Borotra's delivery again was broken through for the deciding points.

'BIG SIX' FIGHTS GRIM STRUGGLE

Peerless Matty Reported in Grave Condition From Relapse.

SARANAC, N. Y., September 12. —Christy Mathewson's condition is serious—how serious those in a position to know avoided revealing—but at any rate he has suffered a rather severe set back in his fight against his old enemy, tuberculosis. The once famous pitcher of the New York Giants is under opiates.

He was resting easily and was sleeping yesterday, according to Mrs. Mathewson.

From other sources came the information that Mathewson's condition is graver that admitted; that he will be unable to leave his bed for six months; that if he survives the month of September he is expected to live another year.

Being Closely Watched.

Dr. Edward N. Packard, Mathewson's physician, denied that the president and part owner of the Boston National League Club was any different than he had been for some time.

He admitted, however, that Mathewson was unable to leave his bed and that for several days he had been suffering from an attack of fever.

"There is no immediate danger," Dr. Packard said, "but he is being closely watched until the fever subsides. There has been no grave change in his condition."

Mrs. Mathewson preferred not to discuss her husband's condition for publication. She had been doing every thing possible for her husband's comfort.

Growing Weaker.

The prevailing opinion at Saranac Lake is that while Mathewson is perceptibly weaker to-day he has weathered the present attack—that the crisis is past.

WON IRISH GOLF TITLE.

PORT RUSH, Ireland, Sept. 12. —The Irish amateur golf championship yesterday was captured by Scotchman, Thomas A. Torrance, who defeated the Ulsterman, Major Charles Hezlet, by four up and three to play. Both players were members of last year's British Walker Cup team.

Due to the establishment of numerous game refuges in Pennsylvania, game is on the increase there in spite of the increase in the number of hunters.

ALL READY FOR LACROSSE GAME

Bradford Stronger For Contest at Norwood—Expect Big Crowd at Home.

RETURN WEDNESDAY.

TORONTO, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—"Bradford are strengthening up for their game at Norwood on Monday against the Havelock-Norwood combines and intend trotting out Leheay and "Buck" Evans. In addition, Jobb of Orillia, who has played a few games thus far on the defence, may also be on the job down. Asc a curtain raiser for the return engagement on Wednesday at Bradford, the Bradford and Orillia Juveniles will stage an exhibition game at 2 o'clock to keep the early arrivals in good humor awaiting the commencement of the big Intermediate fixture, which is the talk of the north country and which, from a drawing card standpoint, promises to send by the boards all previous attendance records at lacrosse games in that section of the country. Bradford can expect a hard tussle with the team from "down east" which recently went into Wallaceburg and downed the team that ran second in the championship race last year and which this season is stronger than ever.

BRADFORD PLAY AT NORWOOD MONDAY

Semi-final Intermediate Lacrosse Game Starts at 3.15.

NORWOOD, Sept. 12.—A game in the Intermediate semi-finals will be played on Monday, September 14, at 3.15 p.m., between Bradford and Norwood-Havelock teams on the Norwood Exhibition Grounds.

The Bradford team is rated as the best in the Toronto district, having defeated Brampton, last year's Intermediate champions, and have also put the fast Weston team out of the running. This will be their first appearance in Eastern Ontario, and will be well worth seeing.

The Norwood-Havelock Intermediates recently defeated Wallaceburg, last year's finalists, and will place their strongest line-up of the season in the field.

The game will be handled by Len Smith of Toronto, an official referee of the O.A.L.A., and is called for 3.15 sharp.

A number of the villagers attended the Belmont Rural School Fair held in Havelock on Friday of last week.

Friends of Mrs. J. F. Elliott, who was hurt in an accident about a month ago at Stoney Lake, will be pleased to know that she is improving.

Mr. Bruce of Toronto is in this district looking after some thirty boys from the Barnardo Home, Toronto, and the Marchmont Home, Belleville.

BARNES UP FIVE.

British Champion in Great Form Against MacFarlane.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 12.—Jim Barnes, British Open champion, amassed a lead of five holes over Willie MacFarlane, United States titleholder, in the first 18-holes of the unofficial world's championship match on Friday at the Philmont Country Club.

Barnes has seldom played better golf in any local experience than he did against MacFarlane. His drives were remarkably long and straight and his approaching was splendid. The putting of both players suffered considerably by reason of the newly planted greens which wre slow and uneven.

Barnes' stroke score for the round was 72, compared with a par of 70, and MacFarlane's 77.

The second 18 holes will be played today.

TENNIS NOTES.

The Peterborough Tennis Club had a very enjoyable corn roast and dance at Chemong last Wednesday night. The attendance was large and the program all that could be desired. A short concert by local talent was an added attraction.

Tournament Notes.

The local tournament is now down to the semifinals and all games will now be played on a schedule drawn by the committee. Players will be notified in good time. The program for Sturdaa is as follows:

1.30—Langley and Mrs. Langley vs. Scott and Miss Mackenzie.

2.00—Jackson and Mrs. Moore vs. Webber and Mrs. Cruthers.

3.30—Scott and Bowness vs. Webber and H. Scott.

Jackson vs. Sills.

The public is invited to these matches and will be made welcome

Senators 5, Boston 4.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11—(Canadian Press). — Boston twice tied the count with the Senators to-day with two run rallies, the second time in the ninth inning, only to lose 5 to 4, when Fuhr, who took the mound after the eighth, permitted the bases to become loaded, and then passed Bluege, forcing Goslin home with the winning run. This victory merely enabled Washington to maintain its seven-game hold on the American League's top round as Philadelphia also won. Score:

Boston ..... 000 002 002—4 11 1
Washington .. 100 010 210—5 13 0

NO EXCUSES BY MACK FOR FALL

Fate and 'Breaks' Stopped Athletics When But One Club to Beat.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 12. — Fate and the "breaks," in Connie Mack's opinion, have shattered his dream of piloting the Athletics this year back to the high places of base ball and pennant glory that has been beyond his reach for more than a decade.

These two factors, he thinks, stepped in without warning to drop the Athletics from the heights to an almost hopeless position in the rear in three weeks.

Mack does not repeat the familiar refrain of the loser — "Wait until next year!"

This was our best chance," he says.. I figured this as our year all along. We had only one team to beat, but we couldn't do it. Next year we will have four or five to contend with. Chicago, New York and Detroit all will be in the thick of the fight in 1926. My club will be strong again, I hope, but it has lost its biggest opportunity.

"I though we were on the high tide until things suddenly turned against us in the West. Our defense, particularly around the infield, faltered a bit and our pitching slumped. These may seem the real causes of our disastrous losing streak, but you know the breaks went against us day after day Where we had been hitting in the pinch, we knocked into double plays, once into even a triple play. We lost three straight games to St. Louis by one run at the start of our losing stretch and dropped the last two to Washington or Labor Day by the same margin. It just seemed that fate was against us.

"We had our full strength on the field all this time, too, so there are no alibis on this score. We had our handicaps, injuries and disappointments earlier in the season, but we surmounted them and kept around the top. Perhaps, with our full strength earlier we would have done even better, but that is only a guess."

But Mack is not through.. Where a dozen years of disapointments might have discouraged the stoutest heart, it has only imbued him with the determination to carry on until triumph finally perches again on his banner.

PROTECT WILLS.

New Agreement For Fight Ordered to be Drawn.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11 (Canadian Press). — A new agreement for a heavyweight championship fight next year between Jack Dempsey and Harry Wills was ordered by the New York Boxing Commission Friday, after the negro challenger and his manager, Paddy Mullins, had rejected the original document signed by Jack Kearns and Promoter Tex Rickard. Wills and his pilot contended that the challenger was not protected.

A straightforward set of articles leaving "no loopholes for Dempsey" was the ultimatum of Mullins. The new articles will be presented to the negro's manager next week.

CLERKS WIN FIRST OF FINAL SERIES

Defeated Mill "B" Team 7-3 in Fast Game of Softball.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 12—The Clerks took the first game of the finals in the Campbellford Softball League by 7 run to 3, defeating the fast travelling Mill B team yesterday afternroon.

The game was keenly contested from start to finish, but the Clerks went into the game fighting to win, and their attack was so steady and consistent that the morale of the hitherto smooth-working Mill team was broken, and the result was a victory for the Clerks.

Of special mention was the work of Ingram, of the Clerks, who repeatedly caught long hard drives that would have meant sure runs for the Mill team.

The second game will be played Monday, Sept. 14th, at 5.30 p.m.

Line-up:

Mill B— McNaughton, p.; Bennett, c.; Blakely, 1b.; Welsh, 2b.; Ingram, 3b.; Storie and Reeve, s.s.; Relf, l.f.; Smith, c.f.; Bell, r.f.

RETAIN A.A.U. RANCH IN OTTAWA VALLEY

Suggested Division of Territory Between Ontario and Quebec Abandoned.

TORONTO, Sept. 12.—(Canadian Press).—A resolution allowing the Ottawa Valley branch to continue in office on the payment of correct fees by March 1 next and the repayment of back fees was passed at the closing session of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada held here to-day. A suggestion was put forth that this territory be divided between the Ontario and Quebec braches, but was abandoned.

The Crow's Nest Pass territory was all located definitely between the British Columbia and Alberta branches, and the case of John Ing was referred to the Alberta branch, there being doubt as to his amateur standing.

The committee revising the constitution will take up the suggestion of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association for a uniform fee and method of registration of athletes.

Room For an Argument Here

A gentleman who noted the story in The Examiner about the freak pig born recently on a farm in Norwood has some ideas on the subject which are rather interesting. He goes to the Bible for a reference:

Jacob, who, it will be remembered had various adventures in life during Biblical days, the chief of which had to do with a dream of a ladder ascending into heaven, and the fact that he served fourteen years to gain the lady of his heart, was fain to go to his own country. Approaching his father-in-law, Laban, he made a bargain with him regarding the separation of his flocks from the cattle and sheep of the older man, saying that he would take the speckled and spotted from among the flocks for himself.

But Laban, who apaprently was of a crafty turn of mind and willing to better himself at the expense of others, removed these beasts from the flock and gave them to his own sons. Jacob, being forced to fend for himself, set upon the following expedient, as voiced in the archaic words of the Old Testament:

"And Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chestnut tree; and pilled white strakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

"And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering troughs when the flocks came to drink, that they should conceive when they came to drink.

"And the flocks conceived before the rods, and borught forth cattle ringstraked, speckled and spotted."

Of course, after that, Jacob had his share of the cattle, and so circumvented his dishonest father-in-law, Laban.

The parallel between the two cases is this: Might it be possible that the mother of the little freak pig has been taking active interest in the vivid circus posters which are lavishly displayed about the country in the summer months. Perhaps the pig pen in which she makes her home or the barn yard may have pictures of elephants posted up? Of course, the little freak had some of the characteristics of a cow also, but a sensitive mind could incorporate more than one impression, if it happened to have become interested in the features of the animals about it or those pictures in its neighborhood. Or was it simply a manifestation of an ambitious turn of mind on the part of the parent, who may have become tired of the ordinary little piglet and decided to have somethigng decidedly different from the ordinary run.

Anyway, the subject opens up a considerable field for discussion.

Black Patent Popular in Women's Shoes

NEW YORK, Sept. 1. — (United Press).—It is said that the Frenchwoman can always be distinguished from women of other nationalities by her tricky footgear. Let her look to her laurels. American women are realizing the importance shoes and hosiery play in one's make up. They have better feet and ankles than most women of other nations and they are determined to make the most of them. They are getting away from eccentric shoe styles favoring less conspicious models where color harmonizes with the frock and lines harmonize with the shapliness of the foot.

Medium vamps rule in the United States. The American woman has found that she can't wear the short French vamp becomingly. One-strap effects and pumps are preferred to ornate strap models. Heels are neither extremely high nor are they low. The shoe extends well up over the foot, thus preventing the flesh from bulging at the instep.

Black patent and black satin will both be popular this Fall. All shades of brown in both suede and kid will be prominent. Owing to the demand for velvet costumes for Fall, it is surmised that velvet shoes will be worn to some extent with the dressy type of costume. Gunmetal satin is a new shade featured for Fall. Blond satin will continue its popularity according to shoe experts.

Pastel shades of doeskin such as yellow, dull blue and green are now being worn with simple summer frocks at the resorts. These models have a single strap and a side buckle. White kid shoes are also favorites at the resorts. Their heels are medium and they have the single ankle strap. Either white hose or delicate nude or lavender tones may be worn with the shoe.

Satin shoes matching the frock are chosen for the informal dance. One also sees metal brocades and blond satin occasionally.

The appeal of the men is based on the ground that such practive may eventually deprive them of their jobs, as it reduced the income of the railway and in consequence leads to a reduction in car service.

SLATTERY COULDN'T BEAT BERLENBACH

Light Heavyweight Champ Was Awarded Technical Knockout in Eleventh.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—The world's light heavyweight championship which has perched atop five heads in the last five years, withstood the challenge of the youthful Jimmy Slattery of Buffalo, under the sturdy defence of Paul Berlenbach, the rugged title holder, of Astoria, N.Y., before a throng of 35,000 at the New York American League Baseball park last night.

The stout-hearted Irish boy from Buffalo went down in the eleventh round of a fifteen round battle under the terrific punches of the champion, after gamely fighting back under a gruelling, relentless attack which floored him six times before Referee Patsy Haley stepped between the fighters and awarded Berlenbach a technical knockout. Slattery, fighting the first fifteen round bout of his career, sagged to the floor under a terrific left at the start of the eleventh. Berlenbach left the ring with liberal applause, but it was nothing to the long ovation for Slattery who, weighing only 161 1-2 to the champion's 172, had measured up to the expectations of the fistic throng.

THEATRES

PERFECT CAST IN "PARENTS PEOPLE?"

New Domestic Comedy Features Menjou, Betty Bronson, Florence Vidor,

A picture claimed by youth!

It is "Are Parents People?" which Malcolm St. Clair directed for Paramount. Almost everyone connected with the picture is young. St. Clair himself is but twenty-seven years old and is the youngest director on the Paramount lot.

In the cast the balance is decidedly in favor of players who have not reached life's half-way mark. Betty Bronson is a vivacious little being of but seventeen years. Florence Vidor, although she portrays the role of Betty's mother, is, in every sense of the word, a young woman. Adolphe Menjou, who is seen as Betty's father, was forced to age himself by make-up so he could look the father. Lawrence Gray, Paramount's newest screen discovery, appears as though he has just graduated from college.

There is not a gray-haired or a melancholy visaged person in the company. The spirit of youth reigns on the set with absolute supremacy.

Menjou, Betty and Miss Vidor are featured in the leading roles of the production, which comes to the Capitol Theatre next Monday. The story is an adaptation by Frances Agnew of Alice Duer Miller's Saturday Evening Post serial. Others in the cast are Emily Fitzroy, Andre de Beranger, Mary Beth Milford and William Courtwright.

AT THE ROYAL.

"LADY ROBIN HOOD" COMING.

"Lady Robinhood," Evelyn Brent's latest starring vehicle, will prove something of a surprise to her many ardent admirers when it is shown here; but it will be anything but a disappointment, if the enconiums of motion picture critics who have seen the production can be taken as a critierion. The story departs entirely from the paths of crook types, which have lately provided Miss Brent with most of her parts; but of melodramas, of color, and of thrills there is plenty, as well as a wealth of old world romance which centres around the girlish leader of a band of Patriots in the Pyranese, the kidnapping of a wealthy young American from his yacht, and the eventual overthrow of a corrupt local Alcalde, or ruler, who has been flagrantly oppressing the people. Miss Brent is superb in her delineation of "Lady Robinhood," who proves a kind of Spanish Joan of Arc, and she is given excellent support. The picture comes to the Royal Theatre on Monday for its initial local exhibition. Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins, who wrote the original story, are to be congratulated on the originality and brilliance of the plot, and the direction given Miss Brent is at all times excellent.

"OH DOCTOR" CLOSES TO-NIGHT.

One of the cleverest farce comedies to play Peterborough lately is now being screened at the Royal, to-night being the last showing. Reginald Denny, in Oh Doctor, from the Saturday Evening Post story by Harry Leon Wilson. Everyone who enjoys clever comedy should not miss it to-night.

"STRONGHEART" THURSDAY IN JACK LONDON STORY.

"Strongheart," greatest of dogs, in the greatest dog role that was ever written.

That in itself is enough to recommend "White Fang," which will be seen for the first time locally at the Royal Theatre on Thursday, when it begins a three-day run. But there is more to be said than just that. For "White Fang" has been reproduced in gorgeous breath-taking scenery, with all the panorama of the eternal snows behind it, and with its ripping, slashing, dripping drama as intact as when London penned it. No picture of recent memory has been made from a great novel which catches the spirit and atmosphere of the book as faithfully and reproduces it with a power as this. It is something in the nature of a triumph for Jane Murfin, the adaptor, and Lawrence Trimble, the director; and to the program of its distribu- Ruth Dwyer and Mathew Betz, who tors, F. B. O. Theodore von Eltz, play important roles, stand out finely, but only after the great "Strongheart" has done his four-footed stuff. Here is the one original canine Thespian; and how that dog can "troop!"

AT THE GRAND

ORIGINALS IN "THUMBS UP"

The usual enthusiasm displayed here over the forthcoming engagement of the popular Originals has already broken forth by the announcement that they, "The Boys," will appear at the Grand Opera House on Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 14 and 15, in their smashing new revue, "Thumbs Up." All the stars of the Company, including Gene Pearson; Bob Anderson; (Jimmie Goode (Back again after a year's absence); Alan Murray; Jerby Brayford; Bertram Langley Thomas Dunn; Lionel Broadway; Percy Campbell (the latter appearing on stage this season for the first time since the old days in France) have exceptional opportunity for the display of their individual talents. The great number of new skits and dances, song hits, concerted and character numbers, as well as the incomparable quartette, make the entire show move with lightning like rapidity. Everything is new and most of the biggest hits were secured in London by members of the Company, while Alan Murray and the Company's competent director, Leonard Young, have again shown their hand in the production of a 100 per cent. entertainment.

Elaborate costumes, correct lighting arrangements, mirth provoking skits and a thousand good things thrown in for good measure in "Thumbs Up." Gene Pearson is singing the waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet' 'among his repertoire of gorgeous numbers. Gene's marvellous soprano voice is even better than before and the ovation accorded him everywhere this year has been phenomenal. Surprises and screams of laughter come to the audience with every appearance of Bob Anderson, his new Dame Number is a riot; Jimmie Goode's new and original line of Darkey comedy is knocking 'em off their seats—and this isn't a quarter of the entertainment that awaits you in "Thmubs Up" when you see it.

COMING TO THE GRAND.

H. Wilmot Young's novelty sensation is packing the houses everywhere, at St. John's, N.B., and Sherbrooke, Que. Hundreds were turned away at each performance. Mr. Young has the happy faculty of giving the people what they want. The Young-Adams Company are now recognized as the leaders of all travelling stock companies. Margie Adams is known as Canada's Bernhardt, and is conceded to be the best-dressed leading lady on tour. The engagement will be for six days and Saturday matinee, starting Thursday, September 17. The opening play will be "The Road to Ruin," with seven high-class vaudeville acts. Popular prices will prevail.

"WHITE CARGO."

"White Cargo," Earl Gordon's striking stage version of Ida Vera Simonton's book, "Hell's Playground," as produced at the Grand Opera House last evening, was not a pleasant thing because it dealt with life as it is on the West Coast of Africa, and the life as it is there, could not possibly be pleasant. But it was as vivid and impressive a dramatization as Peterboro playgoers have seen, a gripping, virile production that held the audience in a spell until the final curtain.

The author's note on the programme gave the keynote.

"It is an attempt," says Mr. Gordon, "to portray the struggle for development in a country which steadily defies the encroaching civilization. It is the reaction to an ever-shining sun which breeds inevitable rot — a rot which penetrates not only the vegetation and inanimate objects, but the minds and hearts of the white men who attempt to conquer it."

At the headquarters of a British rubber company in West Africa, the only white men are the company's agent, seven years in the country, disillusioned, cynical, eaten up by the damp rot, an outcast doctor driven out of England, because drink had brought about his downfall, a missionary, beginning to lose his courage and faith, in the face of the difficulty of trying to convert the natives, and one of the company's employees, broken by the country and awaiting the steamer that is to take him home. The action starts with the arrival of the boat, bringing with it Langford, the young Englishman, who comes to relieve the invalid Ashley.

Langford, young, clean cut, full of life, avows his intention of beating the "damp rot." "I'm white and I'm going to stay white," he declares confidently, while the cynical Witzel, the agent, profanely prophesies that before long he'll go the way of all the other white men on the coast, lose his grip and finally live with a negro woman—"Mammy Palaver"—to use the expression common in West Africa. Tondeleyo, a seductive half-breed girl, soon enters into the situation, and eventually Langford succumbs to her wiles, but complicates things by going further and marrying the dusky beauty, who soon tires of matrimonial chains and tries to escape by poisoning her English husband. Witzel comes to the rescue, and finally Langford is shipped home to save his life, "white cargo" as it were, while Witzel, cynical and irritable as ever, "carries on."

That is a bare outline of the story and does not begin to suggest the intensity of some of the scenes or the manner in which the very atmosphere of West Africa permeates the action. "White Cargo" never flags in interest, and few plays have been given here that contained more "punch."

Of the acting of the splendidly balanced company at the Grand last night, too much cannot be said. It was a wonderfully effective performance, unmarred by not a single weak spot anywhere in the cast. Earl D. Dwire's characterization of Witzel the Agent was perhaps the outstanding feature of the production. It was a part full of dramatic possibilities, and Mr. Dwire made every point tell, his work in the vividly impressive finale of this second act holding the audience spell-bound. Marshall Vincent's picture of the Doctor was never overdrawn, and under Mr. Vincent's deft handling, was one of the high lights of the performance. Isabelle Herbert, as the seductive Tondeleyo, had both the physical and histrionic requirements for the role, and her work was convincing and effective. Franklin George, as Langford, contributed a splendid performance of a difficult part. Milton Boyle scored as the missionary. Willard Dashiell's portrayal of the skipper was always effective, and other members of the cast were up to the high standard of those already mentioned.

"White Cargo" will doubtless be remembered by last night's audience after many other theatrical attractions have slipped from their memory.—F. D. C.

Rain In Northwest Canada Helps Bolster Wheat Price

CHICAGO, Sept. 12. — (Canadian Press).—With rainy weather in the Canadian North-West likely to interfere with the crop movement, wheat prices averaged higher to-day during the early dealings. The smallness of the world's shipments tended also to strengthen values. Offerings here were readily taken, and downturns in the market were brief. The opening, which ranged from ¼c decline to 1-8c advance, December 149 3-8 to 149¾, and May 152 to 153½, was followed by numerous changes, with December reaching 150 1-8. Corn and oats were firmer. Commission houses were fairly active buyers of corn, taking the ground that the corn market is low compared with the general level of commodities. After opening unchanged to 3-4c higher, December 86¼ to 86½, corn scored further gains, December reaching 87.

Oats started unchanged to 1-8c up, December 42 1-8. Later, all months showed some advance.

Provisions were steady, governed by the action of hog values.

TRAIN TO STAY ON LOCAL LINE

Peterborough-Port McNichol Passenger Service Saved By Hon. G. N. Gordon.

SERVES CITY.

All immediate fear of the removal of the Peterborough-Port McNichol passenger train has been removed today through the action of Hon. G. N. Gordon, Minister of Immigration.

J. Wells Fraser, President of the Chamber of Commerce, and S. R. Armstrong, Industrial Commissioner, learned that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was taking a census of traffic and making tests of the usefulness of this service. It is understood that the conclusion was reached to discontinue the train between Peterborough and Port McNichol.

Hon. Mr. Gordon was notified yesterday and immediately telegraphed President Beatty of the C.P.R., making a strong protest and asking that the service be continued. He today received a message from H. C. Grout, District Superintendent of the C.P.R. of Toronto, saying "Have decided to make no change in present Peterborough-Pt. McNichol passenger service."

Because of the importance of the line as a connecting link between the city and many buying points, industrial men in Peterborough have expressed appreciation of the prompt action that maintains a service helpful to their trade. The line brings in many buyers from the West, and is an accommodation to the city.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JAMES HERR.

A very sudden death occurred on Monday evening, when Ellen Doherty, beloved wife of James Herr, passed away after a few hours' illness, although everything possible was done to save her life. She retired at the usual hour Sunday night in apparently the best of health. About four o'clock Monday morning she was taken ill with an attack of heart failure, from which she gradually sank, and passed peacefully away at nine o'clock Monday evening.

She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her sorrowing husband, two daughters, Mrs. John Carr of Ennismore and Mrs. George Boatman of Norwood.

The funeral, which was largely attended, showing the high esteem in which the deceased was held, took place Thursday morning at 9 o'clock from her home, 210 Carlisle Avenue, to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where requiem high mass was sung by Rev. Monsignor McColl, and thence to Norwood Cemetery for interment.

The pall-bearers were: Michael Herr, John Herr, Edward Herr, Michael English, Thomas McCarthy, and Joseph McCarthy.

BLINDFOLD; DRIVES AUTO ON STREETS

Francois Amazes Peterborough Crowd—First Time in Canada.

Driving about the streets of the city, through the Saturday morning traffic crush, behind a blindfolded driver, furnished a memorable thrill for Acting Chief of Police James Reid, D. J. Mahoney of 388 Rogers street, and an Examiner representative this morning.

Francois, the thirty-year-old Frenchman, a native of Marseilles in France, who went through the World War with the American forces, and was temporarily blinded in his war service, made his first demonstration in the Dominion of Canada, and his first drive of such a sort in the rain, this morning. Depending on the impressions received from the trio of silent people sitting in the back seat, and on the co-operation, in a way, of the crowds who watched his progress, he drove skilfully through the streets of the city, sometimes reaching a speed of twenty miles an hour on a clear stretch, after being securely blindfolded, in a manner that left no trace of deception, by Inspector Reid. Thick pads of absorbent cotton, fastened with adhesive tape, and then covered with a bandage of six layers of black cloth, went over his eyes, securely shutting out every trace of light or direction.

Something in the natur of a shadowy picture thrown on a moving picture screen is the way Francois describes his mental sensations.

"Think, think," he commanded his passengers as he threaded his way through the city streets. "Don't mind that boy on a bicycle, we won't touch him.——There is a car just ahead—it's a Ford——We will turn out to miss this team 'All right, go ahead'—(addressed to the driver of a car that had stopped at a crossing to let him pass)——"There is a street car, and another one just behind it——That woman got across all right——There is plenty of time for this man to get across——There is a boy wearing a slicker and a dark hat who has been dodging back and forth in front of our car"—were some of the remarks, truthful in every instance, that came from the securely blindfolded driver as the different objects were approached and passed. He slowed down for C.N.R. Detective Howard, who stepped out with a smile, to test his powers, and a youth who was also evidently investigating his skill, and paused directly in front of the moving car on George street, was told to take his time.

A trip of 53 minutes was taken through the city streets, up to Smith street first, down George to the C.P.R. station, back to Charlotte, and out to the Monaghan Road, back back again to the shop of the "chapeaux," as the driver expressed it, to Jack Primeau's store, where a parcel was bought. "On account of his young man in front of us we will have to back up," remarked the driver coming out of the shop, as a small boy placed himself directly in front of the machine.

Francois gave a brief talk on "safety first" methods in driving cars, prior to beginning his demonstration, explaining his use of the Chevrolet as being "easier to handle, has more power, and is easier than any other car in its class."

A condition of intense mental strain was noticeable as James Espin (Francois' representative) removed the blindfolding bandages, at the conclusion of the drive, but the intrepid young man made no errors during his careful drive through the city streets. Francois, who is described as a second Houdini, will give performances of his powers in this regard at the Royal Theatre on the 24th, 25th and 26th of this month, and will also give a blindfolded demonstration at the exhibition grounds on Wednesday next. He went to Oshawa this afternoon to give a similar demonstration.

United Farmers Deny Intentions to Enter Federal Campaign

J. J. Morrison Repeats That Body is Not Political—Progressives Will Not Embark on a Provincial Effort, But Many Candidates Stand Alone.

MISS McPHAIL TO RUN AGAIN.

Fourteen of the Twenty-One Members of Forty Elected in 1921 Will Run in Present Election — Brother Meets Brother in Lists.

TORONTO, Sept. 14 (Canadian Press).—"The United Farmers of Ontario will take no active part in the Federal election campaign of 1925. We are not a political body," said J. J. Morrison, secretary of the U.F.O., and our interest is not in political parties. We went into the 1919 and 1921 elections to further the policies we stand for and by decision of the members of the organization."

This policy will be also followed by The Farmers' Sun, organ of the U.F.O.

No Big Campaign.

So far as Progressive organization is concerned, no province-wide campaign is in contemplation. Each riding will handle its own affairs, according to officials of the Ontario Progressive party which was formed last winter and which held a convention in Toronto recently. Of the 24 members elected in 1921, 14 will run in the present election as Progressives, while two have been bereft of their seats through redistribution. Of the remainder W. C. Good will retire. Mr. Good considered himself a co-operative U.F.O. candidate rather than a Progressive. Miss Macphail will run again in South East Grey as U.F.O., while A. L. McDougall will run in West Middlesex as U.F.O. condidate. The former member was J. D. Drummond, who died last year, Angus MacDonald, the Labor-Progressive member for Temiskaming, is retiring through sickness. In South Huron, R. J. McMillan will run as U.F.O. candidate against his own brother, T. McMillan, who is in the field as a Liberal. This seat was formerly held by Wm. Black, Progressive, who retires.

GUELPH, Sept. 14 (Canadian Press).—The U.F.O. executive for the riding of South Wellington, at a meeting here, when representatives from every section were heard, discussed the advisability of entering a candidate in the coming election. The concensus of opinion was that the election should be contested.

The effect of the abundant rainfall is seen in the beautiful fresh green appearance of the grass—the brilliant tone of green that is usually only noticed when the grass makes its first appearance in the early spring. The first half of September last year also had many showers but the fall was not nearly so heavy The first heavy frosts came on the 24th and 25th. The blighting touch of the finger of Jack Frost may be looked for very shortly.—W. P.

CONSERVATIVE LEADER ASSERTS WISH FOR AMICABLE RELATIONS WITH CAN. NATIONAL SYSTEM

Me ighen Condemns Government Handling of Railways Before Chatham Crowd.

REPLY TO CHARGES.

Said the Government Had Thrown Railway Board Out on the Ash Heap.

CHATHAM, Ont., Sept. 14 (Canadian Press Staff Correspondent).—"They have driven the Canadian National system into a financial bog under the pretence of giving it fair play, and from the swamp in which it is mired it can never be rescued by the Government of Premier Mackenzie King."

This was one of the declarations made by Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, in the course of his address to a large audience which gathered in the armories here Saturday night. Mr. Meighen devoted more time to a discussion of the railway situation in Canada than in any of his previous speeches. His condemnation of the government for its handling of the national system from the outset was absolute.

Rt. Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, had found fault with him because he (Mr. Meighen) criticized the Canadian National, said the speaker. Mr. Graham charged that he was not a friend of the National system.

"I want to be a friend of the National system," asserted Mr. Meighen. 'In years gone by when the railway wrecks were rolling down on the treasury of Canada, year after year we gathered them into what is now the Canadian National system. We were thwarted and blocked at every move by the members of Mr. Graham's own party. And now Mr. Graham stands up and says that they who blocked the system were its friends, and that we, who criticise the government, are its foes."

The Conservative leader said that when Sir Henry Thornton took over the system, he made an inspection tour and then announced that it was in a state of high operating efficiency. When the government had taken the reins of office following the last general election, it had found a good board directing the system. The government had asked for the resignation of the members of that board, and thrown them out on the ash-heap." One or two of the members had been re-appointed, but the new appointees of the government were inexperienced individuals who were given the appointments for political reasons.

"The government appointed a man from Nova Scotia who was 75 years old, had been a member of parliament but was too old to run again, and too old for the Senate, and they started him in to learn the railway business.

Since the new board took charge, money had been "poured into new purchases," he asserted. Prayers Were Answered Rain Falls On Georgia

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 14 (United Press).—After prayers for rain had been offered up in virtually every Atlanta church yesterday morning, cooling showers fell during the day, breaking a two months' drought. The rain was general throughout the southeast and the weather bureau predicts a wet period with a drop in temperature.

The extended drought had seriously affected crops, curtailed power service and caused a water shortage in many sections.

SALE OF TITLES GIVES INCOME

British Newspaperman Says Titles Will Never Be Abolished in England.

TOO MUCH MONEY

WINNIPEG, Man., September 14.—(Special.) — "Titles will never be abolished in England, as they have been in Canada, because the sale of titles in Britain is too great an income to political parties to be done away with."

This is the statement made here by Hugh Martin, Parliamentary editor of the London Daily News, and member of the British press delegation touring Canada as guests of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Commenting on the recent press agitation for the abolition of titles in the old land, Mr. Martin pointed out that Mr. Lloyd George took in one million pounds for his party from the sale of titles alone during his regime, up until the recent act making it a penal offence to barter for titles; almost anyone could purchase a barony and become a Lord for thirty thousand pounds, he said. This can still be done, he said, because there are still many way of making the offer a year or so ahead of the actual time of purchasing the title.

These views were concurred in by E. Altham, naval correspondent of the London Morning Post, who further pointed out that the only way political parties could do away with their dead, useless timber, was by making them Lords, and sending them up to the House.

All Ready? Lets Go!

Alderman Roland Denne, President of the Peterborough Industrial Board, has given the following message to The Examiner:

"I want to make an appeal to the citizens of the community to make this year's Exhibition a record from every desirable point of view. We of the Industrial Board, have spent a full year in preparing for this Exhibition, and we want the citizens to get behind us in the effort to put this thing over in great style.

"Everything is on a much larger scale; all previous Exhibitions in Peterboro will be eclipsed. We have the biggest Midway we have ever had There are 7 rides 12 shows and 32 concessions in the Midway There will be a full vaudeville show and there will be exhibits that will educate and entertain. The entries for our Poultry Show and for our Cattle Show are beyond those of any former year .

"The various attractions brought in from outside the city clearly show that the Board has spared no effort to give the people the best available. There is Al Sweet's Band, a unique organization and one worth going a long way to see and hear. There will be exhibits of livestock, of agricultural products, of dairy products, a splendid floral and horticultural display, and a section devoted to fine arts.

"We want two things—sunshine from Nature, to tempt out the crowds; and co-operation from all classes of citizens. I appeal to the business men of the city to do all they can to attract visitors and to have their premises dressed up in honor of the occasion. We want tourists to go away with the idea they have spent some time in a city that is animated by the spirit of progress.

"We of the Board are convinced we have done all possible to stage a show that will be memorable. We want to inculcate a feeling of festivity, of civic pride, and of a desire to aid in the expansion of the city in which it is our lot to live. In this effort each and every one can take a part.

"Let's make it 30,000."

CANADIANS ARE CONFRONTED BY MANY PROBLEMS

Kiwanian Joseph Wearing Suggests Three Guiding Stars Showing Way Out.

WEARY OF CLAP-TRAP.

Speaker Says Leaders of Political Parties Are Not Educating People.

Three guiding stars were suggested by Kiwanian Joseph Wearing in a most eloquent address before the Rotary Club at its weekly luncheon to-day, as likely to prove of service in solving the national problems with which Canada is confronted. These were, first education, secondly fraternalism, and thirdly co-operation, with which Mr. Wearing associated imagination.

The speaker began his address by outlining the geographic, historic and economic divergencies that divided one part of Canada from another, pointing out that these divergencies constituted serious problems which every patriotic Canadian should consider in the hope of hitting upon a solution. To the natural barriers existing between different parts of the Dominion were added the economic divergency between the grain-growing Western provinces and the industrial provinces of the east, the division involved in the fact that Ontario, essentially British and Protestant, lies alongside Quebec, essentially French and Catholic, the division between capital and labor, the division between those long established in Can-

WORK OF MERIT.

Murderer Escaped, But Two Alleged Confederates Behind Bars.

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Jack Waddell, 25-year-old motorcycle ace of the county constabulary was shot to death at 4.15 Saturday afternoon on Egerton street by a man believed to be Ed. Harlton, alleged chicken thief after a thrilling chase through East London. Harlton escaped and is being sought by city and county police.

The shooting occurred at the side of the Harlton home, 548 Egerton street, where Waddell had cornered his man after a foot chase of two blocks. As far as it is known there were no eye-witnesses to the deed, the assailant having disappeared when the first person arrived on the scene a few minutes after the shooting. Officer Waddell was still breathing when found, but died in four minutes.

Known through Canada as a daring motorcycle racer, Waddell left the dirt track last spring for police work. Since his advent to county duties he has become known widely through his successful campaign against speeders.

Waddell's sterling work brought him the assignment to Spring Bank drive, long known as a speedway for motorists. His vigilance there has reduced speeding to the minimum and his feats were highly praised by his superiors.

The tragedy was the culmination of an attempted roundup of a gang of men blamed for a series of chicken thefts in this district. The latest robbery occurred Friday night. High Constable Wharton, officer Waddell and other officers were scouring East London Saturday afternoon when the motorcycle officer sighted Harlton.

Becoming desperate on seeing capture inevitable, the pursued man quit his car on Charlotte street, ran around Egerton Street into the lane of the Harlton home which is three houses from Dundas Street on the east side. Cornered in the alley, the suspected man turned and fired and then fled.

Persons who were on the scene immediately after the shooting held the belief that Waddell did not have a chance to use his own gun which was found beside him with all chambers filled.

According to city police, Harlton came to London a short time ago from St. Mary's. At the time of his escape he was wearing a blue suit and a khaki cap.

Two members of the alleged gang were put behind jail bars at one o'clock Saturday afternoon. They are Alex Goldstein, 465 Hill Street, and Lewis Brinden, 108 Maitland Street. They told the high constable that they bought chickens known to be stolen, from Harlton. Waddell was dispatched to keep an eye on the house until the high constable arrived.

Two White Women Tarred And Feathered By Mob

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 14 (Canadian Press). — Two white women were tarred and feathered by a mob of 150 men here Saturday night.

The women were seized by the men while walking toward the city prison farm, where they had been sentenced to serve a 30-day sentence on a disorderly charge. They were taken to a secluded spot and tarred and feathered.

They were then brought back to Jacksonville and let out of an automobile on a downtown street clad only in gunny sacks. The women are sisters.

AMATEURS STAGE STICK-UP SCENE

Took Collection of $200 From the Intimidated Passengers.

SLEEPERS SLEPT.

MINOT, N.D., Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press). — Out here where the West begins two nervous young men turned train robbers early Saturday and held up the occupants of two coaches of the Mountaineer, crack West Coast train of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, boarding the train as it stopped here.

The two men, masked and armed with revolvers, walked through the smoking car and an adjoining coach enjoining the twenty odd passengers in the two cars to "stick up your arms, and dig up your money."

Most of the passengers did so with marked thoroughness, but some of the victims, taking advantage of the robbers' failure to search each person, contributed only what they chose, while still others, feigning sleep, were left unmolested.

When Conductor Rice, of Enderlin, N.D., ran into the baggage car ahead of the smoking car, one of the robbers fired at him, but the bullet went wild. Then, completing their collection which totalled about $200, the two men slipped from the train as it left the Minot yards.

ANCIENT SUN DIAL IS IN FAVOR AGAIN

Modern Makers Marvel at Skill of Ancient Workers.

The vogue of the sun dial is increasing. Large optical houses, firms dealing in garden "furnishings" and even department stores report a steadily growing sale of these ancient time-tellers.

With the invention of clocks and, later, of watches it was thought that the knell of the sun dial had sounded. Apparently, progress was roo rapid for these ancient devices, which were everywhere superseded by millions of fast-ticking timepieces. It was not until comparatively recent years that the sun dial began to come into its own again, enjoying an honored place in the modern garden, where it is valued for its antiquity, its slow, dignified and noiseless record of the eternal passing of time—and as a warning, too, perhaps, against the hurry and rush of to-day.

The pyramid and the obelisk, by intercepting the sunlight and casting shadows, served to show the time of day to the Egyptians. But though it was the Egyptians and Babylonians who first began to reckon time by scientific methods, a Greek living about 140 years before Christ is credited with inventing the first sun dial. His was not altogether a popular invention among the philosophers and thinkers of ancient Greece, who did not enjoy being reminded of the passage of the hours.

Modern sun-dial makers marvel at the skill and the knowledge of the ancient workers, with their passion for perfection and their studiousness. For the making of sun dials is an art by itself, calling not only for artistic feeling but a thorough knowledge of mathematical and astronomical principles involved. A description of a modern sun dial reads as follows:

"This dial is guaranteed to record local sun time accurately. Every hour, angle and division thereof appearing on the plate is exactly figured for the latitude at which the dial is to be placed." Other dials are described as achieving "an equation of time-table, showing the difference between sun and clock time for every day of the year." The description of these complicated devices explains that: "A beam of light through a small hole in the gnomon acts as an accurate calendar, falling day, at noontime, on the day of the year as engraved on the analemma."

The faces of these dials are covered with figures, with circles, with arrows and annotations, and also bear the names of the months. They are decidedly complicated affairs, which the early Greek who invented the sun dial would probably never recognize as an expression of his ancient idea. But though design may change, the symbolism of the dial remains forever the same.

CROP COMPETITION.

Seymour Society First Prize is Won By Roy Walker.

CAMPBELLFORD, September 14.—William Monaghan, of Wellington, who judged the corn in the standing field crop competition held under the auspices of the Seymour Agricultural Society, has sent to Secretary J. Wilson Stone, the names of those who won prizes. The list of seven out of a total of 12 entries, with the number of points scored by each out of a possible 100 is as follows:

Roy Walker, 88; W. A. Winn, 87½; M. H. West, 87; E. A. McCook, 86½; Thomas Weatherill, 86; W. Rannie, 85½; J. E. Milne, 85.

The competition in the case of the five farmers who did not win prizes, was equally close. The percentage scored by the winner was low, but when he completed his work here Mr. Monaghan said that while the corn crops were excellent the presence of weeds reduced the number of marks awarded. This condition is not peculiar to Seymour Township this year as owing to the wet weather it has been impossible to keep down the growth of foreign matter in the fields.

CHALLENGE TAKEN UP.

Campbellford Man Will Arrange 100 Yard Foot Race.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 14. — Some one who signs himself "Missouri" has a letter in The Examiner expressing a desire to make a match for a 100-yard foot race with a Campbellford man, the trial of speed to be made at the Fair here.

If "Missouri" will come out from cover and send his name and address to Alex. McGregor, Box 367, Campbellford, an effort will be made to find him an opponent. Charlie Holmes, who recently failed by one-fifth of a second, out of condition as he was, to cover 100 yards in 12 seconds, says he is out of the game, but there are several sprinters here who can beat Holmes, so that to outrun him would bring more honor to "Missouri" than to vanquish a man who has had his day on the cinders.

Suzanne Lenglen, the French tennis marvel, won her first big open event at the age of fourteen, and has only once been beaten at singles since the war.

SCHOOL FAIR GOOD DESPITE HEAVY RAIN

Good Attendance and Many Exhibits at North Cavan Fair.

MILLBROOK, Sept. 14.—The fourteenth annual rural school fair for the North Cavan district was held at Ida on Friday, September 11, the attendance being very good considering the heavy thunderstorm in the morning, the weather not clearing up until some time after the dinner hour.

Probably the threatening weather had something to do with lessening the number of exhibits in the various classes, though the entries were all of excellent quality, and there was practically no class without a fair showing of the articles called for.

Six schools were represented in the parade for which Colonel Odell, and Mr. Clarence Allen of Newcastle, were the judges. The schools participating in the parade are now limited to five minutes for drills and yells, general appearance, precision in marching, discipline and deportment being points considered by the judges.

Mount Pleasant, S.S. No. 2, Miss Alberta Russell, teacher, won first prize in the parade; Beechwood, S.S. No. 4, Miss B. Nixon, teacher, came second, and Cairo, S.S. No. 9, Miss Electra Preston, teacher, third.

The handsome silver cup, which is donated to the school winning the highest number of points per pupil in all school fair work, was won for the second consecutive year by Matchett's school, Miss E. Preston, teacher. Beachwood school won the cup in 1923. Any school winning the trophy for three years, not necessarily consecutively, holds it as its permanent property.

The Poultry Judging Contest created a lively interest, the winners being: 1, Ruth Trotter 2, Raymond Hechiman 3, Gordon Ruth 4, Allen Winslow 5, Mansell Finney 6, Ethel Cunningham.

A good programme of races was run off, the younger element taking particular enjoyment out of this part of the day's proceedings, as a final number in the annual event.

The Women's Auxiliary of St. John's Church served hot meals on the grounds, and the booth was also well patronized.

The special prize for a map of Canada, given by the Women's Institute of Cavan, evidently created a great deal of interest, judging by the number of entries received. The judges for this class were Colonel Odell, Mrs. Ray Syer, and Miss Jean Syer. The winner included: 1, Gladys Williamson of Miss Ethel McKnight's School 2, MacNewton of Mr. R. Sutton's School, Cavan 3, Ruth Staples of Miss Preston's School, Matchetts.

This is the first year the Institute has offered these special prizes which are given in money, and reach a total of $5.

OBITUARY.

THOMAS ILIFFE.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 14. — Thomas Iliffe died Friday night in a Peterboro hospital, after a long illness, during which he underwent a severe operation, after which he appeared to make steady progress for a time, and his recovery was hoped for. The remains were brought to his home here, some distance out the Gravel Road, on Tuesday, a large number of friends calling at the family residence on Sunday to tender their sympathy to the bereaved family.

An Englishman by birth, the late Mr. Iliffe had been a resident of Campbellford for over 16 years, and for some time he had been a valued member of the staff of the Weston Shoe Company. One of the first positions which he held on coming to this town was helping to build part of the large plant of the Campbellford Cloth Company.

The late Mr. Iliffe had a long and honorable military record. He fought with distinction in the South African War, and when the Great War broke out he got into active service again, enlisting with the 59th Regiment. He spent nearly four years overseas, and was both wounded and gassed. He won honor in the service of the Empire, but his military activities impaired his health and shortened his life. At the time of his death he was Sergeant - Major in the local company of the Northumberland Regiment.

The deceased is survived by his widow, two daughters and a son. One of the daughters, Mrs. Archie Asseltyne, resides at Napanee, the other children living at home.

The late Mr. Iliffe will be buried this afternoon at 2 o'clock with military honors. The remains will be taken to Christ Church, where services will be conducted by Rev. G. C. Clarke, the rector.

CONSERVATIVE LEADER ASSERTS

made on operation, and left out all the interest which must be paid and all the addition expenditures.

"The first step to take is to say to any directorate in charge of the system, there's the railway, go ahead and run it, but don't throw any more of our millions into it," declared the Conservative leader. New commitments should be barred. The government, he stated, instead of showing the railway obligations as part of the debt of the country, endorced bonds of the system and did not include the amount of these obligations in the national debt.

For a long time the government had been telling the people that "We were just on the eve of prosperity," Mr. Meighen said. "I never knew so long an eve in all my life," he concluded. He quoted from a report of a speech by Sir James Elder at the Toronto Exhibition, in which Sir James dilated on the advantages of a protective tariff to the commonwealth. The wheels of industry were spinning in Australia and two hundred millions had been cut off the natioanl debt of that country since protection had been adopted.

"During the same time, Premier King has clipped this of the tariff one year and that the next until our sons and daughters by hundreds of thousands are compelled to emigrate to the United States to earn a living," Mr. Meighen asserted. "When they in the United States stand on their feet and shut our products out, let us stand on our feet and shut their products out," he continued, amid applause. When Mr. King cut down the tariff, he was wont to say it was a step in the right direction. "If you want to keep on taking these steps in the right direction, you'd better elect Mr. King, because I can assure you that you will not have them if the Conservatives are returned to power," he declared decisively. "We've listened long enough to a declaration from demagogic lips that reduction of the tariff is a good thing for the country."

Speakers of the evening included J. D. Chaplin, Conservative candidate in Lincoln and former member, and A. D. Chaplin, his brother, Conservative candidate in Kent, in which riding Chatham is located. The latter said that Mr. King was fond of saying that a wave of prosperity was coming.

"Well, ladies," said Mr. Chaplin, "I hope that it's a permanent wave, but I think it is only a notion in Mr. King's head."

J. D. Chaplin went on at some length into the French and Australian treaties. The former had already worked grave injury to Canada, he said. We were now selling France half as much as before the treaty was entered into, and buying double from that country. 'We have a government which made a treaty which might be described as a rotten business bargain," the speaker insisted.

With reference to the Australian treaty, Mr. Chaplin charged that the treaty ratified was not the one signed in the first instance. The market for almost every Canadian farm product would suffer injury from it.

Business as Usual

William Davison was proud of his grocery business. He had watched it grow from nothing, and now he had completed his fifth expansion. Things were going well, and the steady nature of his trade made him confident that there would be still further growth in the near future.

And then, quite suddenly, he died.

Wholesalers immediately took steps to protect themselves. His new store was not completely paid for; considerable stock was being carried on a credit basis; creditors demanded payment.

But William Davison had foresight. Among his papers was a business policy in the North American Life Assurance Company. The creditors' demands were met, the business kept on a "going" basis for over a year, then sold at a fair profit.

No business which depends upon one man is safe without Business Insurance. It is a guarantee against forced sales and heavy losses; a prop to support the concern weakened by the loss of its keystone.

There is a North American Life Business Insurance Policy to meet your requirements. Send us the attached coupon—it will bring you full particulars.

A GOOD START MEANS EVERYTHING.

The Peterboro Industrial Exhibition will be open to the public tomorrow night, and the Examiner hopes that there will be a huge crowd in attendance to send the big fair off with a running start.

While the midway attractions will be in operation, there will be no admission charge to the grounds tomorrow night, while a fee of 25c will be collected for admission to the grandstand for those who wish to hear the opening concert by Al. Sweet's Famous Singing Band of Chicago.

Although this celebrated musical organization will be at the Exhibition all week, tomorrow's concert affords the best possible chance to hear Mr. Sweet and his musicians, who have the programme to themselves and will give some of their best numbers.

Wednesday will be children's day, with a fine programme of music, vaudeville and special athletic events in the afternoon and an attractive evening performance topped off by a display of fireworks.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday will see the Exhibition in full swing in all departments, with splendid programmes arranged for each day.

Peterboro's Exhibition is the biggest yet in its entertainment features—make it the biggest yet in attendance.

SCHOOL ACCOMMODATION.

Friday night's conference developed a formidable list of potent arguments as to the necessity of providing more Collegiate Institute accommodation both for academic and for technical work.

The testimony of Principal Kenner, of Mr. C. E. Jamieson, head of the commercial department, and of Mr. A. F. Hagerman, in charge of the night technical classes, left no room for doubt.

It was shown that, although the regulations call for classes of 30 pupils, the main building of the Collegiate Institute at present has an enrollment of 428 pupils, divided among 11 class-rooms, an average of nearly 40 pupils per room.

The main school has no gymnasium or facilities for domestic science and manual training.

As for the commercial department it has had to be taken care of in the old South Central School, overcrowded, not of a high standard from the standpoint of sanitation, a fire-trap and situated so far away from the Collegiate Institute that the pupils have little advantage from the literary society library, cadet corps and athletic activities carried on in connection with the Institute.

Mr. Hagerman showed that the evening vocational classes are steadily growing in popularity, and that the present accommodation for such classes leaves

THE HYDRO APPOINTMENTS.

The appointment of Mr. C. A. Magrath of Ottawa as Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-electric Commission and of ex-Mayor C. A. Maguire of Toronto to fill the vacancy on the Commission caused by the enforced resignation of Mr. Ramsden has apparently given keen satisfaction throughout the Province—except possibly in quarters where a more partisan selection was hoped for.

Mr. Magrath, upon whose shoulders the mantle of Sir Adam Beck has fallen, is an outstanding Canadian with an enviable reputation as a man of vision and integrity. As a member of the House of Commons, as Dominion Fuel Controller and as Chairman of the Canadian section of the Deep Waterways Commission, Mr. Magrath has been of most valuable service to the people of Canada, and there is every reason to expect that in the responsible position to which he has been summoned he will continue to show those qualities that have distinguished his career.

His appointment is a surprise, but a most pleasant one.

As for Mr. Maguire, his loyalty to the Hydro-electric cause has been so clearly demonstrated and his popularity among the representatives of the Hydro municipalities, whose nominee he is, has been so great that the selection of Toronto's ex-Mayor will be popularly received.

Eastern Ontario will view the composition of the new board with especial hope, feeling that the needs of this section of this Province will be more fully appreciated.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Let us make it 30,000 in 1925.

The weather conditions on Saturday materially affected the Children's Aid Society tag day—most unfortunately in view of the fact that the Society is facing a heavy budget for the ensuing year.

Peterboro expects this week that every citizen will do his duty—attend the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition.

Start right by going tomorrow night—the first night of the Exhibition.

"The shouting and the tumult cease;
The Meighens and the Kings depart."

In other words, the political leaders are carrying their campaign oratory into the Maritime Provinces this week.

One splendid advantage Mr. Magrath, new Hydro Chairman, possesses. He was never even mentioned as a possible choice by the Toronto Telegram.

MR. DRURY'S RETURN.

The possible return of Mr. Drury as leader of the Ontario Progressive party has an interest that is not overshadowed even by the flurry of excitement over the beginning of the Dominion campaign.

The former Premier would undoubtedly do more to pull the Progressives together than is possible for Mr. Raney to accomplish, for the latter has the disadvantage of being an urban dweller and a lawyer, both heavy handicaps under the circumstances.

Like Mr. Raney, Mr. Drury is an out-and-out prohibitionist and the dry banner will be carried by the Progressives in every campaign.

The result, therefore, of a re-invigorated Progressive party strengthened by the return of Mr. Drury and pledged to prohibition might, paradoxical as the statement may seem, prove disastrous to the dry cause.

The opinion is becoming more and more prevalent that when the Ontario Government goes to the country again it will be on a policy of Government control.

The wet vote of the Province would naturally concentrate behind the Government.

The dry vote would be split between the Progressive and Liberal forces, with neither getting enough support to offset the united strength of the wet faction.

In short, if the return of Mr. Drury merely places the Progressives in a position to kill off the Liberal party, and if the McCauslands and Curries have their way and the Government comes out flat-footedly for the sale of liquor under a system of Government control, the Ontario Temperance Act could not be considered what the insurance companies term a good risk.

LOOKING FORWARD.

This is no time to be preaching pessimism in Canada. The facts do not warrant it. The Dominion, in common with other countries, experienced something of the industrial strain, the unsettled business conditions and the stress of unemployment which fell upon the nations as a protracted aftermath of the wastage and the cost of war. But the cheerful note is dominant once more. Business steadily revives. Industry resumes its expansion. The call for workers grows more insistent and urgent. The harvest fields yield bountifully. Confidence returns with the realization that the country is "well away on the up-grade."

This wholesome revival is bound to result in a renewal of active and enterprising efforts to build up population—of the right sort. The problem of immigration is paramount. The solution of practically all the other pressing national problems—problems of settlement, of development, of transportation, of reduction in taxation, of industrial and commercial expansion—depends upon it. The peopling of the land with contented, industrious, law-abiding citizens will do more than all else to ensure permanent prosperity.

A significant start has been made. Announcement by the Department of Immigration at Ottawa yesterday that, during the months of April, May and June this year, a total of 32,449 of settlers had come to Canada is good news, particularly as it is specified that 16,094 of this number came from Great Britain and Ireland, 5,307 from the United States, and 11,048 from countries in Northern Europe. But it is particularly encouraging to find that, in these three months, 9,141 Canadians who had been in the United States for six months or longer, and who went to that country to settle, have returned home. It is an indication that the so-called "exodus" of which chronic pessimists made so much is at an end—that the drift of those seeking the larger opportunity is now Canadaward. Official figures show that since April of last year no fewer than 52,916 Canadians have "come back."

This is a splendid start—these thousands of Canadians who are voluntarily and eagerly "immigrating" homeward. It indicates that the time has arrived for Canada to resume on a generous scale her national efforts to build up population by inviting immigration. The appointment of Hon. G. N. Gordon as Minister of Immigration and Colonization brings to the direction of this most important work an alert, vigorous and enterprising personality. Mr. Gordon has already taken hold, and his brief forecast of the lines upon which he proposes to operate is sure to meet general approval. His plan, as stated, is so to co-operate with the British Government in its Imperial settlement scheme as to ensure the securing of a considerable proportion of Motherland emigration—"settlers who can make satisfactory farmers and good dairymen." The Minister adds: "We should not encourage city dwellers, who would settle in the urban centres. We must actively develop immigration of the right kind."

That is a wise policy. Experience has shown that it is the part of unwisdom to bring in those unskilled settlers who rush at once to the cities and clutter the unemployment lines. Moreover, there is less work for the foreign day laborer. The era of railway building is over. There is need for a careful supervision and wise selection of those to be brought in. The branches of Immigration and of Colonization in the one Department should be more closely allied. The arrival of workers for the land and settlers for homesteads ought to contribute more directly to the work of actual colonization if the best national results are to be achieved.

It will be well also to take steps to bring about, so far as is possible, the co-ordination of Canadian immigration activities. The railways, the steamships and other agencies—only a week ago the organization of the Hudson's Bay Company Overseas Settlement, Limited, was announced—are all working individually on the lines of immigration and colonization, and doing good work, but a unification of effort, supervised and directed by the Government Department, and closer co-operation along all lines, would surely tend to more satisfactory results.

A great opportunity confronts the new Minister of Immigration and Colonization. He can give his country no better service than so to organize and direct her activities in building up a splendid new citizenhood as to people and develop her lands and make them richly productive.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—Preparations for lake shipments of wheat from Duluth to Chicago next week led to a downturn in wheat prices today at the last, although previously the market had shown gains. Closing quotations on wheat were heavy at 5-8 to 1 3-8c net decline, December $1.48 1-2 to $1.58 5-8, and May $1.52 to $1.52 1-4. Corn finished easy, 1-8 to 1 1-4c down, oats 1-4c off to an equal advance, and provisions varying from 10c lower to a rise of 10 to 12 1-2 cents.

Wheat prices closed at the day's lowest figures. Active selling carried the market down swiftly from the earlier levels, which were attained when business taken as a whole lacked volume. The late selling followed announcement that two vessels had been chartered to load wheat at Duluth for Chicago. Another factor which acted as a weight on the market was almost complete dearth of European demand.

Rainy weather in the Canadian Northwest, likely to interefere with the crop movement there, had more or less to do with the early strength in the wheat market.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Sept. 12 (Canadian Press).—There was little demand from foreign buyers for wheat, oats and barley on the Montreal market Saturday, there being only sales of odd loads for nearby shipment and the trade on the whole was quiet.

The trade in cash grain on the local market was also slow but the feeling was steady and prices were unchanged.

The feature of the flour trade was the weaker feeling that developed in the market for spring wheat grades and millers generally reduced prices 50 cents per barrel. The trade in all directions was dull.

Prices for all grades of millfeed were well maintained under a steady demand. The market for standard grades of rolled oats was quiet and steady.

Little business was transacted in eggs, but the tone of the market was firm. While a firmer feeling prevailed in the butter market owing to the better demand, prices failed to register any change, and prices scored a fractional advance.

QUEBEC BUTTER AUCTION

MONTREAL, Sept. 13 (Canadian Press).—The offerings of butter at the Quebec Federated Co-operative Society auction sale held here last week amounted to 2,000 packages, as compared with 1,500 packages for the previous week, and 5,250 packages for the same week last year. The competition between buyers for the No. 1 creamery was somewhat keener than usual and the price was bid up to 38 3-4c per lb, at which it sold, while the top bid for the No. 1 pasteurized creamery was 39c per lb. and refused, with 39 3-4c per lb. asked, which prices as compared with the same week of last year show an advance of 4 5-8c per lb. At the country boards last week prices were 9-16c to 7-8c per lb. higher at 37 13-16c to 38 1-4c per lb.

A THOUGHT.

THE INSANE DO NOT INSURE.

Preventive plans are not generally popular by those who have no brains or by those who have brains that are twisted.

When we fully realize that we are not liable to live many more years, we go right on playing the game with no plans for paying the grave-digger. We leave the last job to our loving friends.

At fifty-nine I have just taken out more life insurance, for it is my plan to leave my family, my business associates and my banker without regrets.

Another illustration: The employers of the State of New York pay seventy millions of dollars annually for industrial accidents and this only partly protects.

The insane do not insure.—The Silent Partner.

FAMILY WALKING ACROSS PROVINCE

Passed Through Cobourg Last Week—Churn and Mash Found.

COBOURG, Sept. 14.—A family arrived in town on Tuesday night, walking to Montreal. There was a young Englishman and his pretty little wife and three children, the youngest a baby, which the father carried strapped to his back. They had come from Sarnia. They were provided with lodging and needs and in the morning started out again on their long tramp.

Completed This Month.

The new dining-room which is being put in the main building at the Ontario Hospital by Henderson Bros. is practically completed. M. Jex & Co. are building a new boiler house, which will be completed this month.

Churn and Mash Found.

Inspector George Goodrich and Provincial Officer Cousans are stated to have visited a home near Manvers Station in Manvers township a few days ago and to have found in a fence corner in a field, a ten gallon dairy churn, with a blanket thrown over it, containing wheat and molasses, in a state of fermentation. They are further stated to have found some molasses in the barn, and two jars of home brew and a bottle containing a small quantity of moonshine liquor in the house. The churn with its contents was delivered to the Department of Inland Revenue, Port Hope. A sample of the alleged home brew was sent away for analysis.

WEDDING BELLS.

WANSBOROUGH—CORNEIL

On Wednesday, September 9, at 3 o'clock a very pretty wedding was solemnized at Maple Lodge, Omemee, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Corneil, when their daughter Joy became the bride of Dr. Robt. Cecil Wansborough, of Lindsay, son of Mr. and Mrs Robert Wansborough, of Laurel, Ont. Rev. E. W. Rowland of the United Church, Omemee, officiated.

The bride wore a charming frock of white georgette over crepe de chine. Her veil was of silk net, appliqued in floral design, and held in place by a coronet or orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of ophelia roses and lily of the valley, and wore the groom's gift, a string of pearls.

Miss Ruth Corneil, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and carried a colonial bouquet of Columbia roses and baby's breath.

The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Irving Wansborough.

Mrs. Cecil Corneil played the wedding march and during the signing of the register, Miss Annie Martin of Fenelon Falls, sang "Thank God for You."

After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served.

Dr. and Mrs. Wansborough left later by motor for Toronto and points west, and on their return will reside in Lindsay.

OPEN LETTER NO. 6

RT. HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

Here is a simple explanation of a situation familiar to every manufacturer, but too little understood by the public at large.

There are two things every manufacturer must do. First, he must produce. To produce, he requires labor. To produce economically, he requires efficient labor!

A Hamilton manufacturer cannot long retain his efficient workers by paying them only $4.00 a day if they can get $6.00 by going to Buffalo. The Canadian manufacturer must successfully compete with United States rates of wages, or lose his help. If Canada were isolated, like Australia, it would be different; but seeing that our average worker can change his Canadian job for a United States job any time he wants to, at the cost of a five-dollar ticket and a five-hour train journey, what can the Canadian manufacturer do but accept the situation, and try to make the best of it?

Next, he must sell. And if he is to continue in business, he must sell at a profit. Now the United States manufacturer, under a high tariff, with the opportunity that ample protection in a huge home market has given him, has assured his workers steady employment at good wages by going in for mass production, thus reducing his unit costs to a point where he can successfully export, or at least dump without serious loss. But the Canadian manufacturer, under a low tariff, is forced to compete in his limited market not only with the dumpings of mass production from the United States but also with European goods that have been produced by cheap labor, at a very much lower cost than his own!

So what is he to do? If he tries to reduce his cost of production by lowering wages, he loses his help. If he refuses to meet the prices set by his foreign competitors, he loses his market. If he retains his market by meeting those prices, he forgoes most if not all of his profit, and so paves the way for his eventual failure!

Any way you look at it, the Canadian manufacturer under a low tariff is in constant danger of being squeezed between two millstones. Recent reductions in the tariff, by bringing those millstones into closer play, are resulting in hundreds of manufacturing concerns being squeezed to a point where it is only a question of time before insolvency must ensue.

What can be done about it? You cannot change the face of Nature by separating Canada geographically from the United States. You cannot induce the United States to abandon its protective policy. Nor can you persuade European countries to abandon the use of sweat shops and child labor, and adopt our minimum wage laws, as a means of raising their costs of production to the level of our own!

But you can make it more difficult for mass production or dumped goods from the United States, and for the products of cheap European labor, to enter this market, by requiring them to pay higher customs duties. And under the peculiar circumstances in which Canada is placed, that is the only way that will ever protect the Canadian workingman in the enjoyment of good wages, and afford relief to the manufacturer by whom he is employed!

Yours respectfully,

PEMBROKE, Ont., Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Henry Lidke, aged 65, Saturday was found dead in a field in Churchville, near here, with a rope around his neck. He had recently lost his position and was despondent because of his inability to obtain work.

STRIKE LOSES HOLD.

Four Ships Leave English Ports on Schedule Time.

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—The liner Ausonia, unhindered by the unofficial strike of the seamen, sailed on schedule time Saturday for her voyage to Montreal. A further weakening of the walkout by the seamen was seen in the sailing for New York of three other liners — the Ohio, Mauretania and Lancastria. A total of nearly 3,000 Canadian and United States visitors to Europe returned to their homelands aboard the four steamers.

GENEVA CONFERENCE DELEGATES MAINTAINING DRIVE FOR PEACE SUPPORT THE PROTOCOL TRINITY

Principles of Arbitration, Disarmament and Security Are Living Force.

LAUNCH NEW EFFORTS.

Fervid Speech From French Delegate Shows Nation Eager to Comply.

GENEVA, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—If the Geneva peace protocol of 1924 slumbers, its guiding principles of arbitration, security and disarmament remain a living force, inspiring patient efforts to attain permanent world peace. This, at least, is an authoritative summary of impressions in Geneva today following the first week of the 1925 meeting of the League of Nations Assembly.

Owing chiefly to the opposition of Great Britain to the protocol of 1924, newly reiterated by Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, Britain's Foreign Secretary, before the assembly, this body now seems to realize that nothing can be done in this session to further the cause of the protocol as it is now framed. It is also realized that any attempt to modify the terms of the protocol would be both unwise and perilous.

Now that negotiations for a security pact are to begin soon between Germany and the allies, including Italy, the delegates to the assembly appear to be convinced that any concrete action must await the outcome of these delicate pourparlers, realizing that if these negotiations succeed one of the aims of the Geneva protocol—that is, security—will have been partially attained.

A review of the deliberations of the past week shows that there is apprehension lest the failure of the present session to approve the 1924 protocol will cause the message to go forth to the world that a great work peace-making has failed miserably, and that the League of Nations is lost. Delegate after delegate, eminent in their respective lands, has arisen to assure the world that the drive for peace will continue by the League of Nations.

Pressure from outside the Assembly continues to fortify the courage of the delegates. A big mass meeting last night addressed its message to the leaders of the delegations of many countries, and went on record as supporting unconditionally the protocol's trinity of arbitration, security and disarmament.

Count Von Bernstorff, former German ambassador to the United States, in his address at the meeting, declared himself in favor of the creation of a United States of Europe as the most practical means of saving the Continent. He said that no country more than Germany desired universal disarmament.

Another outstanding feature of the Assembly's first week was a declaration from the strongest military nation in Europe that all peace efforts must be considered impotent unless crowned by the reduction of armaments. This was the statement from Paul Boncour, of the French delegation, who in his fervent address of Friday obviously produced an enormous impression on Geneva. His speech is interpreted as indicating that France will participate eagerly in a disarmament conference once general security is attained.

Meanwhile, the Assembly seems to be determined to prepare for the launching simultaneously of new peace efforts in the direction of the extension of the principle of compulsory arbitration and the creation of new channels for conciliation between nations. Next week's work of the League's commissions is expected to show the development of these plans.

RYLSTONE PULPIT DECLARED VACANT

Was United With Burnbrae For Many Years, But Union Vote Caused Split.

BURNBRAE, September 14. — A new chapter in the history of Rylstone congregation was begun on Sunday last when Rev. Mr. Elliott of St. John's church, Campbellford, officially declared the pulpit open, acting upon instructions from the Presbytery, which met in Kingston on September 1st.

For over forty years Rylstone has been united with St. Andrews, Burnbrae as the united congregations of Seymour and Rylstone. When the question of union with the other denominations arose the Burnbrae charge voted non-concurrence while Rylstone decided to enter the United Church without a vote. For a time it was thought that Burnbrae would remain independent and Presbytery allowed Rev. D. A. McKenzie to minister to both congregations. When, however, the Burnbrae congregation decided to link up with non-concurring church, Presbytery decided to take action, and at the meeting of September 1st a decision was reached to declare the Rylstone pulpit vacant. Rev. Mr. Elliott will conduct services at Rylstone for the next two Sundays as well.

While Seymour and Rylstone have been united as one charge they have had splendid pastors who have done a great work in the two communities. There have been Revs. , J. Moore, J. Smith, C. C. Salisbury, J. J. Black and D. A. MacKenzie, the latter having been in the charge less than a year. The former pastor, Rev. J. J. Black of Orillia United Church, will conduct anniversary services at Rylstone about the end of the month.

It is a matter of regret to all concerned that this step should have to be taken, but as each viewed the situation from a different angle no other course was open. It is likely that several families of the strong Unionist group at Burnbrae will join with the Rylstone congregation.

Bear Around.

Burnbrae received a visit from the bear which has been in the neighborhood for the past week. Some of the hunters at Menie endeavored to make a closer acquaintance with bruin, but were not fortunate enough to meet him. He has literally been feasting upon the fat of the land, having visited several of the apple orchards in the vicinity.

Sporting News.

An executive meeting of the Seymour Baseball League was held at the Seymour parsonage on Saturday evening last to arrange play-off dates. The following are the dates for the semi-finals: Saturday, Sept. 12, Seymour West vs. English Line. Friday, Sept. 18, English Line vs. Seymour West. Should a third game be necessary it will take place early the next week. Burnbrae play the winners of this series in the finals about the end of the month.

WIFE OF FAMOUS NOVELIST DEAD

Lady Amy E. Parker Died After Year's Illness in Hospital.

CANCER CAUSE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Lady Amy E. Parker, wife of Sir Gilbert Parker, Canadian novelist, playwright and statesman, died in Harbor Hospital here Saturday after an illness of more than a year. She was sixty years of age.

In October, 1923, Lady Parker was operated on for cancer in London. In December, 1924, she entered the hospital here with a recurrence of this trouble, and remained there until her death.

Burial will be made in Belleville Cemetery, Belleville, Ont., tomorrow.

Lady Parker, before her marriage, was Amy Vantine, daughter of the late Ashley Vantine and Charlotte Macy Vantine, of New York City. In December, 1895, she was married to Gilbert Parker, at that time a young novelist just beginning to be known.

After the marriage Sir Gilbert and Lady Parker made their home in London, where, in 1900, he was elected member of the British Parliament for London. In 1902 he was knighted, and in 1915 he was made a baronet. A year later he became a privy councillor.

Among Sir Gilbert's numerous works are "The Right of Way," "A Ladder of Swords," "The Weavers," "The Seats of the Mighty," and "The Battle of the Strong."

PIONEER OF WEST DIED AT SELKIRK

Served With Government Troops Against Riel—Mushed to Yukon.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Captain Roderick Smith, a familiar figure of the North-West during the past sixty years, died at Selkirk, Man., on Saturday. He came West long before the days of railways, having served in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company for many years at Norway House. He constructed many craft used for transport purposes before modern facilities were introduced. Captain Smith served with the Government forces during the Riel Rebellion, and was with the foremost of the "Tillicums" who mushed their way north during the Yukon gold rush.

WARSAW WOMEN'S INSTITUTE MEETING

Pastor Pinkerton Gave a Very Interesting Address to the Ladies.

WARSAW, Sept. 14—The regular meeting of th Women's Institute was held recently. A good number were out. The main business was to arrange for the refreshments to be served at the school fair.

Pastor Pinkerton gave a very helpful talk on "Why An Institute?" As he had prepared the talk while on his vacation, he told a little of his canoe trip up Georgian Bay, and of camping in a disused lumberman's camp about eighteen feet by fifteen, eight bunks and long table. As he sat at one end of the table to prepare the address the table decorations were not much inspiration.

Mr. Pinkerton liked to speak to ladies as they are always attentive listeners. He considered it nothing but right that women should hold meetings to discuss matters for the general good as well as for the social effect. In all societies the social end is prominent, the purposes are different. In the Institute all the women of the community meet on the same footing. It is the one place where they do. . There are social cliques, friends, families; there are the different churches, with much in common, but some minor differences and these differences are by some considered worth holding.

He warned the women not to forget the evangelical side in their social welfare work. Social welfare work is good and necessary, the duty of all Christians taught in the Bible, but it is not all.

A rider was attached to the verdict protesting against the use of liquor on the ferry.

SAYS TWO PARTIES IN NEAR ELECTION

Agriculture Minister Will Not Hazard Guess as to Winner.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 14. — (Canadian Press). — Maintaining that the approaching Federal election had narrowed down to a two-party fight, Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture in the Liberal Government, in a statement here Saturday, declared all the West had to decide was whether it wanted "Meighen with his high tariff, or King with the lowest tariff since Confederation on implements of production."

"There are just possible two parties this time," he said. "Four years ago it was different." The Minister predicted the King Government would be returned, but that he would leave "counting of the trophies and skulls until after the battle is over."

Mr. Motherwell fired the first gun of the Liberal campaign in Manitoba at a meeting in Selkirk Saturday night. Hon. E. J. McMurray, former Solicitor-General, also spoke.

RAIROAD UNIONS TO AMALGAMATE

Questions Will Be Presented to Next Convention of Union.

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press). — More than 3,500 local lodges in Canada and the United States of railroad craft unions have declared for amalgamation.

O. H. Wangerer, of St. Paul, secretary of the International Committee to Amalgamate Railroad Organizations, so declared in his report at the committee's convention here Saturday.

William Z. Foster, 1924 Workers' Party candidate for President of the United States, declared that the rail unions of Great Britain were fast approaching consolidation.

Mr. Wangerer said the question of amalgamation was to be presented at the next convention of the Carmen's Union, and was being agitated through constitutional amendment proposals in the boilermakers' and maintenance of way organizations. He said the committee had staunchly supported the present unions against the one big union.

He mentioned a contemplated mission to the next American Federation of Labor convention from the British Trades Union Congress to promote international trades union unity.

Warning to seekers of beauty

When your complexion is at stake, use a soap made solely to foster good complexions

PALMOLIVE Soap is made for ONE purpose only . . . to foster good complexions. It is not intended for laundry work. Not even for fine fabrics. It is a skin soap alone. To protect your skin, that is the only kind of soap that you should use.

In old days, women were told, "use no soap on your faces." For soaps were too harsh. Then Palmolive came. A soap made of cosmetic oils. A soap made to be used freely, lavishly on the skin.

Women tried it, and were amazed. They told others—and better complexions resulted. Palmolive soon became the leading toilet soap of the world. In France, home of cosmetics, it became a leader. French women largely discarded French soaps for Palmolive. Today Palmolive Soap is one of the two largest selling toilet soaps in France.

That is because Palmolive is a unique creation, based on 60 years of soap study. A soap made solely to guard your youthful charm.

But on your skin, don't expect the cosmetic results of Palmolive from any soap claimed to be good for all purposes . . . No "jack-of-all-trades" soap should be used for your complexion.

Don't let anyone mislead you into believing that ordinary toilet soaps, or cleansing soaps, will bring you Palmolive results. They won't—no ordinary soap can.

There are soaps at 25 cents and over, which approach Palmolive in results. But Palmolive sells for 10 cents . . . no more than ordinary soaps. Enormous production brings you this modest cost.

Wash, launder, cleanse with any soap you wish. But when beauty is at stake, take care. Use Palmolive, a soap you know is safe to use. It is nature's formula to "Keep That Schoolgirl Complexion."

FOR GERMS

Soaps to "destroy" germs should be used only by advice of a physician. All soaps "remove" germs to a certain degree. Palmolive will "remove" germs as well as any soap safe for toilet use.

The real difference in soaps is in their action on your skin. Some are too harsh, others crudely blended. Palmolive Soap is a unique creation, a blend of rare cosmetic oils; a soap made for one purpose only, to foster good complexions. Don't expect Palmolive complexion results from any strong "medicated" soap, from any "jack-of-all-trades" soap, from any soap claiming alike for fabric washing and the skin.

Note carefully the name and wrapper. Palmolive is never sold unwrapped.

NATURE LORE

By WALLACE HAVELOCK ROBB

What the Merry Men of the Greenwood have been doing this week will keep until later, for there is too much nature hot stuff happening around here, and we just must unload it before it cools off.

For those who did not hear about the hair-grown bear which got mixed up in the churn at Charbonneau's, we will repeat the fact that it was captured with a leather collar around its neck to hold it, and a light chain, with a peg in the ground.

Excelsior, my guide, came over for me and we started across the lake in his crank-and-bale-and-row-when-the-engine-won't-go boat. After all the known kinds of water travel except swimming, we arrived at the Charbonneau farm.

His nibs, the young bear, was far smaller than I had expected to find. Excelsior tells me that he was born at the tail-end of winter, or came out of the den for the first time about April, which seems probable. It is very likely that this cub was born during the month of February, as little black bears are the most tiny and timid things you could imagine. They are not any bigger than a little puppy, and have their eyes closed for a month or more after they are born. They develop so slowly that they make very fine pets, taking all summer to reach even big cub size.

It is because the cubs take so long to grow big and dangerous that they make such nice pets. However, they are out of their proper place in a town and among people, as we shall see by this buttermilk case, and also another Excelsior just told me.

The last story we will have first, because it is short. An uncle of Excelsior, a few years ago, brought home two very small black bear cubs with him, when he came into the village from the lumber camp, a few miles up the valley.

The cubs grew and were very comical. They were so tame that they had the free run of the place, even after they became quite big cubs. However, it took them so long to grow that winter came again and they were still undersize, so, since they were gentle, they were left to roam about like ordinary pet dogs would be.

As the winter advanced, the cubs seemed to become real bears and one of them took a fancy to become bad tempered, too.

Mr. Charbonneau, the uncle, was away in the lumber camp, and Mrs. Charbonneau had to send for him to come home, as the bad tempered cub had taken a fancy to the spare bed and had become a very bad bear. It got the other innocent bear into all sorts of mischief, smashing up the pantry and making a wreck of the place.

Mr. Charbonneau and several men took the two big animals on a sleigh and carted them up into the lumber camp and released them.

The good tempered bear went about his business, but the bad tempered one went right back to the village and broke in the door of the house, chased Mrs. Charbonneau to the barn and ate up all the food, before it was captured and taken back to the lumber camp, where the men chained it up and tamed it with bread and molasses.

However, that was some years ago. Now for our own little scamp.

All the village boys and girls were standing around the circle in the sandy soil. Either they were there to entertain the cub or he was there to entertain them. I never could make out which, for the interest was mutual.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silvar

Dotty Meets a Dear Little Mother Moth

"Oh, you cute little Butterfly," Dotty whispered as she saw the tiny plain little insect sitting on a leaf of the mulberry tree in her Grandma's yard. "You're not exactly pretty, but you are so sweet in your dull colors. May I ask what kind of a butterfly you are? Most all butterflies I have ever seen are so brilliantly dressed that you look rather Quaker-fied."

"I guess there's a reason for that," laughed the little plain insect, "for I am not a butterfly at all. I'm Mrs. Bomby Moth, if you please."

"Mrs. Bomby Moth!" Dotty exclaimed. "Why, I never heard of a Bomby Moth I don't believe. Do you have any caterpillar children"

"I hope to have some," chuckled Mrs. Bombay Moth. "You see we Bomby Moths are not very long lived and we have to hurry with our families. That's what I have been doing today, finishing up my laying. I guess of all the caterpillar children, mine are the most useful. You see my caterpillars are called silk-worms. They make the silk that gives you your hair ribbons."

"Oh, the very idea!" cried Dotty. "What do they look like?. When will your eggs hatch? May I watch them spin?"

"Wait a second," laughed Mrs. Bomby Moth gayly. "One question at a time. For the first question, the silkworms are very small, homely looking things. They have better spinners in their head than any of the caterpillars and the silk that they spin is a lovely yellow shade and very strong.. When the threads first come from their body, it is quite sticky, but when it dries in the air, it becomes very strong and hardens into silk. It takes just about thirty days of eating before the silk worm is ready to spin its cocoon. Around this cocoon it wraps yards and yards of this lovely yellow silk, then in he crawls and soon casts off his caterpillar coat and when he comes out in the world again, he will look just like me."

"And you say from this comes my ribbons?" asked Dotty. "Isn't that wonderful! I should love to see how they make the silk into ribbons."

"So would I," laughed Mrs. Bomby Moth. "It must be interesting. Some of my meadow friends told me that there is a lovely silk mill in Brooklyn, New York, where little boys and girls can go and see how they make ribbons. Why don't you get your Mama to take you over there some time? Now that you have seen me and know me, I should think it would be lovely to see what my caterpillar children are good for."

"How happy it must make you to know your children are worth while instead of being a nuisance to you like some children."

"Indeed I am a very happy Mother," laughed Mrs. Bomby Moth "I have a cousin, Mrs. Tinea Moth, whose children are just as destructful as mine are useful. I have thanked my stars a good many times that I am not called upon to raise such a family. Well, here I sit chatting when I should be on my way. Good-bye, dear. When you see a pretty ribbon, don't forget the little Bomby Moth," and spreading her little plain, dull wings, she sailed away.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.

Although this may be a lively day, with sudden events precipitated of a radical nature, the auguries may not be read as fortunate. In fact, new ventures should be postponed, as there is a menace of losses and difficulties. In domestic, social and affectional matters, however, things will enjoy a more pleasant aspect, but may take a sensational or unconventional turn.

Those whose birthday it is should endeavour to keep themselves quiet and in routine grooves, as new ventures and hasty changes might bring disaster. Speculative enterprises should be shunned, else sudden loss threatens. A child born on this day may be active and enterprising, and may meet with losses and disaster unless it keep out of risky and speculative ventures.

YOUR GARDEN

FROST AND FROST PROTECTION.

Somewhere around the twenty-fifth of this month or possibly earlier, we must expect a frost sufficient to kill the tender plants. As this frost or frosts will very likely be followed by a period of fine, warm weather, the wise gardener will protect his flowering plants so that he may enjoy their color and beauty right up until the last moment of hard frosts. This protection of bloom as the time of frost approaches is well worth consideration, especially on the small place where protective material can be quickly placed.

Watch the weather bureau forecasts or do your own forecasting. Certain atmospheric conditions suggest frost and by noting these signs, especially in the afternoon or early evening, precautionary saving measures may be used in time. If the weather comes in waves, and it usually does during the season of frost, an unusually warm spell will very likely be followed by a a drop in the thermometer. A clear sky and still clear air with a steadily falling temperature in the later afternoon is one of the most common signs of frost, the clear sky allows for increased radiation and improves the possibilities of frost. The passing of a storm is usually followed by the weather clearing and becoming colder often indicating a frost. If the temperature falls steadily in the late afternoon, reaching 40 degrees by 6 or 8 p.m. with a clear sky and a light wind, frost is indicated by morning. It is well to know also that frosts occur in lowlands, valleys and pockets, sooner than on higher lands and hill sides. They are most likely to occur in small villages than in or near large cities, and also inland more so than near bodies of water. Northern slopes are the worst, western next and eastern and southern less so. Sandy, well-drained and dark colored soils are less liable to frost than heavy clays and light colored soil, or any kind that is wet or badly cultivated.

There are several methods of warding off frost on the small place. Heating or moistening of the air by means of smudge fires or orchard heaters and sprays respectively. The plants may be covered with light cloth, paper or a mulch is a much used and effective method. Spraying the plants themselves will both prevent the formation of frost and help to thaw out hardy plants that may have been touched during the night.

AUTHORITIES STUDY JAPANESE YOUTHS

Evidence of Moral Decadence Brought About by War and Earthquake.

TOKYO, Sept. 12. — (Associated Press).—While the rising generation of Japan appears to be little affected by "radical thoughts," there is unmistakable evidence of general moral decadence brought on by the World War and aggravated by the 1923 earthquake disaster, is the conclusion recently reached by the Department of Education after studying papers collected from the students of 190 middle schools and girls' high schools throughout the country.

The department started its investigation last year with the view of obtaining the mental reactions of young Japan on various moral and ethical questions. The students, it was said, apparently were quite frank in answering the questions put to them. One of the officials, summing up his conclusion, said it was particularly noticeable that many boys and girls seemed to lack the power of judging between right and wrong.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

HOW EDISON DOES WITH FOUR HOURS REST.

From the early days of thought about living there has been perennial debate over the number of hours one should sleep. Sir John Sinclair, a distinguished English scientist, warns against sleeping too much, particularly in the summertime. He says oversleep blunts the senses and weakens the body and mind.

Napoleon considered four hours enough and Thomas A. Edison believes that amount of sleep is sufficient. Jack Dempsey looks upon nine hours as the irreducible minimum.

I can quite understand why Edison and Dempsey should differ and yet both be right. In all probability, physical workers require more sleep than those do who are mentally occupied. An active child must have much more sleep than an inactive person well past middle life.

Habit has a lot to do with it. If your parents have insisted that you rise at 6.30 and you have kept up that practice, you are not able to keep your eyes shut after that hour. On the other hand, if nine o'clock is your regular breakfast hour, you will think you are killed if you have to catch a train at seven.

Most early risers go to bed early. Nine to six is nine hours. Nine to five is eight hours and the hardest workers never get up before that, except possibly for a few months during the rush season.

Country people look askance upon the late hours of city folks and yet, the truth is, both classes get about the same length of time in bed. Eight hours or even nine is the rule of most Americans.

If I were to lay down a hard and fast rule for the human family, I should fix eight hours as the minimum. Most of us would do very well on eight hours and, in my opinion, it is a rare person who requires less. Personally, I should hate to be pinned down to that number. Every once in a while I want two or three extra hours.

As I have observed Mr. Edison, it strikes me he knows how to relax. Brief and, perhaps to him, unconscious periods of more or less complete relaxation make up for the sleep he does not take. There is no doubt people differ a great deal in their personal mannerisms and characteristics. If you drum the table with your fingers, tap your foot, cross and uncross your legs, twirl your thumbs, bite your nails, twitch your shoulders, play with your knife and fork, wiggle and twist in your chair—all these things wear out your body. They are silly and unnecessary habits which sap your energy.

Mr. Edison does not do these things. He conserves his mental and physical reserve, using it for useful purposes only. He can get along with four hours of sleep, but you and I are not so sensible, so we need more sleep.

Jack Dempsey is not so frugal in his demands. He uses great chunks of physical strength. He wears out three or four times the energy Mr. Edison does. It is not so delicately and nicely applied, so the Wizard accomplishes for humanity results which count for more in the long run. But in the ring, Dempsey, too, is a wizard.

Each of us must decide for himself how much sleep is essential. Certainly, there must be enough to give a sense of refreshment. Regular hours for sleeping and sleeping in a well-ventilated, quiet and dark room are the real essentials.

ANSWERS TO HEALTH QUERIES.

G. G. Q.—What do you advise for frost-bitten fingers and heels?

A.—Paint the sore spots once a day with the following preparation: Iodine crystals, 5 grs.. ether, 2 drachms, collodion, 1 ounce. I would also suggest wearing lighter shoes and stockings while indoors. Do not expose your hands or feet to extreme heat after being out in the extreme cold.

MRS. J. G. F. Q.—What will cure blackheads?

2.—What will cure poor intestinal elimination?

3.—Is there any cure for bunions?

A.—Correct the diet by cutting down on sugar, starches and coffee. Be sure to have regular intestinal elimination. For further particulars kindly send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

2.—Have your meals at regular intervals. Eat simple, well-cooked food. For further particulars kindly send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

3.—Bunions may be somewhat relieved by wearing a broad-toed shoe. However, try to keep pressure from the great joint. For further particulars kindly send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

RHEUMATIC PAINS GO SWOLLEN JOINTS VANISH

Twisted, swollen, unsightly joints are rapidly freed from pain and brought back to normal with Rheuma.

Lame people walk without aid; sleep comes to those who have been unable to lie in bed; hands that were helpless because of terrible rheumatism are now able to do their share for the support of the family.

Rheuma is a wonderful remedy for rheumatism, gout, neuritis, lumbago and neuralgia.

It is a wonder-worker; it never falters, never gives up until every vestige of poison is expelled from the body.

Rheuma acts on stomach, liver, kidneys and bladder all at once and quickly brings long prayed for comfort to distressed sufferers. McDermid & Jury and all good druggists sell it with guarantee of money back if it isn't satisfactory.

"Where Does He Ever Get His Energy!"

OFTEN you've heard that expression, haven't you? But where does he get his energy? What is it that gives people abounding energy and vitality, endurance? What makes them full of life?

It's their food. Food has a tremendous influence on the way we feel, on the things we do, because it's our food that supplies our energy, our vitality.

Foods, no matter how much nourishment they contain, must contain that nourishment in a form your body can easily assimilate.

Serve Grape-Nuts often for your summertime breakfast or lunch, or at bedtime. Grape-Nuts was designed purposely to supply to the body in easily-digested form the elements so vital to its proper nourishment. Three-fourths of Grape-Nuts is the energy-giving carbohydrates. Then there is blood-enriching iron, phosphorus to strengthen the bones and teeth, proteins for muscle and body-building. The whole wheat and malted barley from which it is made give these important food elements to Grape-Nuts. And the process by which Grape-Nuts is made—22 hours of baking—leaves them ready for instant assimilation.

Buy a package of Grape-Nuts to-day and try it to-morrow morning. Four teaspoonfuls is sufficient for a serving. Add cream or milk. Taste for yourself the nut-like flavor. Enjoy the delicious crispness. Grape-Nuts is sold by grocers everywhere in wax-wrapped packages which keep it always fresh. Costs less than one cent a serving—real economy. Ready to eat from the package.

LASH CURBS CRIME TOLL SAYS MONTREAL CROWN PROSECUTOR

Criminals Once Lashed Never Offend Again, Convict's Friend Admits.

FEAR THE CAT

MONTREAL, Que., Sept. 14.—That one may understand punishment of certain classes of criminals in Quebec by the means of the ancient cat-o'-nine-tails, some of the background of this province must be known. Critics of the lash here give as their only reason for wanting it abolished—along with capital punishment—that it is medieval. Critics of these critics reply by saying that Quebec, in a way, is medieval. Well, even if Quebec is seventeenth century French in part, that criticism is not altogether fair.

The cities are an interesting bi-lingual mixture of the Gallic and old Britain. The French civil code and the British criminal code apply in the courts. The population of the province, 2,500,000 or so, is about 90 per cent French, and that means French speaking, for by the treaty of 1776, when France ceded Quebec to Great Britain, it was specified that the French in the new world would be permitted to maintain their language and customs.

If the people are medieval, so are their customs. Crime is regarded as it was in the seventeenth century, and one can almost feel the threat of the noose for poaching in the limitless gaming country, let alone know that the lash awaits him who would commit robbery by violence, or attack a child or a defenceless woman. The French have been accused of rosy tolerance in matters of sex; but they have no mawkishness over a man who has committed a crime against a woman or a girl.

Crime Waves in Port Cities.

Crime waves are known in the port cities of Quebec and Montreal, because of mixed population and vicious strangers. Theft of a pair of wornout shoes from a village house or farm cottage is a subject for a year's gossip.

"We are in the trough of a crime wave now," R. L. Calder, who recently resigned as crown prosecutor in Montreal, told me as we sat in his office. "We have more crime than the rest of the provinces because of conditions that are different. We have two seaports; we have some elemental people.

"We had a pretty bad crime wave a little over a year ago; holdups became so flagrant that it was not safe to walk the streets after dark. The judges, reluctant about imposing the cat, came to it as a last resort. The holdups ceased. The cat may have been employed more here than elsewhere in Canada, but it has been effective. With the conditions we must meet we would have as bad a crime condition in Montreal now as Chicago has, were it not for the threat of the cat-o'-nine-tails.

"The cat is like any other drastic punishment. We believe that, like hanging for murder, the lash for robbery or criminal assault is a deterrent."

Mr. Calder recently debated here with Clarence Darrow on capital punisment Montreal's popular opinion is that Calder won by a mile with his argument for the death penalty, but the debate, without a verdict, was held before a prejudiced audience.

Whip Stops Crime Waves.

"If murderers get off," said Mr. Calder, "or are sentenced to prison and then pardoned; if thieves and holdup men and attackers of women go scot free because of a maudlin jury; if convicts are pardoned because of political influence, there will be crime waves, and bad ones. We believe in drastic measures and, although we do have crime waves, those drastic measures quickly reduce them.

"In all my experience I know of no man who has been whipped to come back for a second dose. There was 'Red' Ryan, a notorious gunman in Montreal, who finally was lashed. Some time after his release from prison he was accused of a minor crime.

"Ryan told the prosecutor that he was innocent—but he said he would plead guilty to any crime carrying a prison sentence, if only he were not whipped."

Convicts' Friends Oppose Lash.

In all Montreal, apparent to one seeking facts about punishment by the cat-o'-nine-tails, there is only one group—aside from those who have been whipped themselves—that objects to the lash.

"We are opposed both to capital punishment and the whip," Secretary John Kidman of the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association said. "We believe both penalties are relics of the barbarous ages."

"Is it the unanimous belief of your organization that the cat should be abolished?" Mr. Kidman was asked.

"Not exactly," was the reply. "Most of our women members favor the cat as punishment for offenders against women and children."

"Have you ever talked to men who had been punished by the lash?" Mr. Kidman was asked. "And do you believe that it is a deterrent?"

Certain It Is a Deterrent.

"I have interviewed many, and am certain that it is a deterrent," he said. "But the lash breaks a man's nerve. Its imposition should well be made the subject of medical study. Every man who has been whipped that I have interviewed has broken down and sobbed when asked about it. They never forget. It makes them hysterical; unless a man is of very strong fiber, I fear it breaks him to be whipped, breaks his nervous constitution."

It may be well here to detail what the law specifies in regard to the lash. It may not be imposed more than ten strokes at a time. Before a man is whipped he must be carefully examined by a surgeon, the prison surgeon if there be one a competent practitioner if the prison has none; examined every day for seven days before the lash is given. Those seven days are said by Mr. Kidman to be seven days of torture.

There are two forms of whipping, the cat-o'-nine-tails and "the strap." While the strap is more brutal and cuts deeper, leaving scars, convicted men fear the cat more. It has nine thin throngs and each makes its temporary mark.

In imposing sentence, the judge must specify cat-o'-nine-tails, or flogging by strap, and give the total number of lashes, but he may not specify the dates upon which those stripes shall be laid; that is up to the jail governor or prison warden.

Law Applies to All Canada.

Under the Dominion criminal code, founded upon British law, the lash came to all of Canada, its sanction as old as constituted law under the British flag. While it is prescribed throughout the Dominion under the law, it is seldom imposed except in this province.

The lash "may be given," according to the code, for a number of offenses upon conviction, but it is seldom employed by Montreal judges except for wife beating, attacks upon women or children or attempted attacks and robbery with violence. The code specifies that it may be imposed for any kind of a number of offenses against the king, for robbery or burglary when armed, mistreatment or attempted mistreatment of a girl under 18, choking with intent, drugging with intent, second offense of procuring (first offense five years), indecent assault. Four years ago picking pockets and assault with intent to rob were added in the province of Quebec when a wave of such crime became general in Montreal.

The code does not say that the lash must be applied; it says the convict is "liable" to the lash, that the judge may impose that penalty in addition to imprisonment.

No Sightseeing in Prison.

Requests for permission to visit St. Vincent De Paul prison were denied. Such permission may be had only from the minister of justice at Ottawa. Requests to visit Bordeau jail were successful, but expression of a half-hearted desire to see a whipping was met with a firm refusal.

"Under the British flag," I was told, "prisons are places of punishment, not items on the sightseer's program. The public is excluded from whippings, even more rigorously than from hangings, and hangings are quite solemn with us."

A Simple Way to lighten cloudy teeth

This remarkable new way, urged by dental authorities, also Firms the Gums . . . removes the grimy film that clouds and hides the natural beauty of your teeth.

THAT dull, "off-color" teeth can be lightened amazingly, even given dazzling whiteness, now is an accepted dental fact. You can work a transformation in your mouth.

Leading dentists now tell us how to clear grimy teeth, and, at the same time, give firmness and healthy color to delicate gums. A new method that supplants old-type dentrifices. It removes the grimy film that covers teeth and hides their natural beauty.

Just run your tongue across your teeth. And you will feel that film. It is the great enemy of pretty teeth and healthy gums.

It clings to the teeth, gets into crevices and stays. It forms a breeding place for germs. It lays our gums open to bacterial attack, your teeth open to decay. Those germs, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Old-time methods failed in successfully fighting film. So ugly teeth were common. You must remove it. Ordinary brushing won't do it satisfactorily. Under it are the clear, whiter teeth you envy in others.

Now modern science has perfected an effective film combatant, called Pepsodent. It acts to curdle film, then removes it — no harsh grit dangerous to enamel. It firms and protects gums; beautifies teeth quickly and correctly.

Stranger Than Fiction

THE CLUE TO FORTUNE.

By M. B. Levick.

The motorcycle policeman let her out when he chased them north, and he let her out when he chased them south. His low mount swooped, and to those who watched from behind him on the level road the motorcycle seemed to be rising or curving a downward course, like an airplane hiding its tail-light in a cloud. The policeman pursued machines, but on each machine was a number, and he was also pursuing numbers. In the back of his head there were the numbers 50 and 1835 and 1,000,000.

They had nothing to do with his duty up and down the streets and boulevards of Baltimore. They had nothing to do with the license plates that gathered from all the States that skim along the roads he patrolled; plates with orange numbers on a green field, and yellow on black, and white on blue—all the combinations one could think of, coming from all over. Fifty was the number of years his grandmother's marriage license had been lost and 1835 was the year in which it was issued. The other number, 1,000,000, had come to him from England. It was the number of dollars that might be his if he could find the marriage certificate that bore his grand-mother's maiden name.

In a ripe old office in London, with desks worn smooth by generations of elbows and wrists, a solicitor rummaged in a docketed file which contained the fragments of many years. He verified the names of men and women long fallen into dust; he traced the travels of forgotten souls across lands and seas which, since they departed, had shrunk to a tithe the breadth they had in the days of sail and stage coach. He looked on maps and discovered cities where no cities had been. And somewhere in this cobwebbed pile of circumstances there was an heir.

The solicitor stroked his side whiskers (for all solicitors have side whiskers) and pursed his lips as, looking over his spectacles, he blew the dust from the edge of a folded paper. On another day, 4,000 miles away, a motorcycle policeman, dismounting beside an overtaken car, blew the dust from his memorandum book. Neither knew the other, but there was something that linked one to the other, making them both think in terms of the same numbers.

The lawyer who had come from England a few years before had no solicitorial whiskers. His manner was firm. He pointed out that since the marriage certificate was lost there was a mising link. How could the policeman prove that he was the grandson of the long-vanished English girl to whom the fortune had been willed in the distant past?

Yes, the fortune amounted to a million. The motorcycle man pondered what he could do with a million. But the lawyer still spoke of the missing certificate, and policeman underwent the pangs of financial disaster. The money was his, yet it remained lost to him for lack of a bit of paper.

The policeman's house took on the appearance of a place besieged. A hundred ransacking burglars could not have made it more topsy-turvy. Trunks, boxes, books searched leaf by leaf, the upholstery, the spindle legs of the old what-nots, all were searched. And there was no marriage license. The figure in the old picture on the wall looked down calmly, but for all the other things in the house there was no calm.

Fifty was the number of years since any one had seen the marriage certificate. It had been kept because it was so quaint, testifying to a marriage made in 1835. The family Bible gave the date. All the older generation had taken it for granted the certificate was permanent; it was one of those things never consulted, but mused over when it came to hand by chance. And now it would not come to hand. The older ones figured, estimating years by births and deaths, and they said they had not seen the document in fifty years. They had hunted high and low since lawyers first came, hinting at a million dollars w[illegible] if. Once more they gave up.

The link that concerned the man in England with the policeman in Baltimore reached back through time as well as through space—reached back to old New York in 1835.

A young man in a beaver hat, with, bootstraps on his checked pantaloons, saunters through the green suburbs above Fourteenth Street, and with him, demure and sweet in her new print dress with frills on it, there walks a young woman. They are happy together here, remote from the turmoil of the great city of 200,000, where men speed by on those foolish velocipedes, propelling themselves with their feet, and the omnibuses dash so fiercely that people talk of putting a bridge across Broadway for the sake of foot passengers.

In this idyllic remoteness the young man takes the young woman's hand, and he stammers and she blushes, half-turning her head but perhaps smiling in the shade of her poke bonnet. And so it comes about that the marriage certificate is written out with a splendid scroll-like flour[illegible]

Charles Soukoup, Baltimore motorcycle patrolman, has recovered the 1835 marriage certificate of his grandmother, as here related, through a picture's chance fall. She was Elizabeth Nim, who was married to Henry Poston in New York by the Rev. Henry Chase on Jan. 24, 1835. Soukoup believes the document will prove his right to an English estate reputed to be worth nearly $1,000,000, which originally was willed by Ellen Brockton to her relative, Elizbeth Nim.

HEADLINERS IN THE WEEK'S NEWS

Chief Michael Twoaxe of the Six Nations Indians died at Caughnawaga, near Montreal, the other day. He died with his dream unfulfilled, for he had hoped to win a fortune of a quarter of a million dollars.

Chief Twoaxe, law-abiding descendant of the old-time Iroquois, was one of a group of redmen claiming $4,000,000,000 compensation from the state of New York for the loss of rights which had been their forefathers' before the invasion of the white men. A quarter of a million was the share which Chief Twoaxe was to get and the last years of his life were largely devoted to attempts to push the claim.

Reports of his death as published here and there, hint at the pathos of his case. "He died," they record, "before he could carry his legal battle to a finish."

But was it so pathetic after all?

Had the old redskin obtained a decision from New York state, one of two things would have happened.

He might have lost his case. In fact, all things being considered, it is highly proabble that he would have. Then, instead of dying with his boots on, so to speak, still fighting to reach the goal which had been his ambition for the past fourteen or fifteen years, and still as hopeful of winning as he was at the commencement, he would have been a soured and embittered old Indian.

Or he might have won his case. Had this happened, Chief Twoaxe as well as every one of his neighbors on the reserve would have suddenly been presented with fabulous sums of money. And it is hardly likely that the results would have been pretty. In a few months Chief Twoaxe and his braves would have been almost penniless again. Their little reserve would have been a mecca for the salesman. Soon nothing but a lot of motor cars, a regiment of player-pianos, some costly furniture and five-tube radio sets would have remained to mark an era of glorious spending. In any case, their enjoyment of the simple life and simple pleasures of their reserve, a life that most city dwellers frankly envy, would have been spoiled.

The side of the case that calls for sorrow is not the Indian's side. In the despatches regarding the chief's death it is gently hinted at. One newspaperman sketches in a word or so the way in which the legal skirmishing to put this $4,000,000,000 claim before the legislature came about.

"Fourteen or fifteen years ago . . . certain lawyers visited this and other reserves and collected the sum of $100,000 to fight for a settlement of the claims," reads the story.

Sir Alexander Roger, British business man, returning to England after his fifth, tenth, or perhaps it is his fiftieth, visit, has analyzed the efficiency of the American and discovered the reasons for it.

Light lunches and the bright, invigorating air of the American continent are responsible for it, declares the baronet. "The average millionaire New Yorker now spends only a few cents for his lunch," he states, "which consists of what is called half-and-hal and a plate of biscuits."

Among his other impressions of the public of the great republic, Sir Alexander records the fact that drunkenness is almost a distinction in America nowadays.

He might not have made this remark had he known that at least one European correspondent of an American paper had referred to him as "one of the most distinguished of recent visitors to U.S.A."

It was a dull week that does not produce some outstanding remarks on the subject of men versus women or vice versa. This week it is the president of the American Chemical Society who has his say in the great debate.

An essay contest was staged by the society in question. Six scholarships were offered as prizes, worth $2,000 each. Thousands and thousands of essays were submitted and judges spent months going over them and listing them according to merit.

Now it has been announced that four of the prizes go to girl students and only two to men and, taking this as a basis for generalization, the officers of the American Chemical Society feel justified in stating that women chemists are twice as proficient as men.

On the Road to Tomorrow

What are you doing to help him?

YOUR little boy is travelling the road to To-morrow. You have travelled that road yourself—are you giving him the benefit of your experience? Are you making provision for his education?

Year by year sees more university graduates promoted over the heads of competitors who started in business as boys and served years of apprenticeship.

Some men are forging ahead who are self-educated, but in every phase of business to-day—in every walk of life—the college man has the advantage. He has broader knowledge; is better equipped.

Consider these facts, taken from government reports:

Men who as boys left public school at 14 years of age earned on an average $500 a year. High school graduates who left school at 18 years of age, earned an average of $1,000 a year. At 58 years of age the high school graduate who had worked 4 years less had earned $18,000 more. And statistics show that time spent in high school and university is worth at least $40,000 in the lifetime of each university graduate.

You think that your son will go to university, of course. All parents do. But investigation shows that out of 1000 children to enter public school only 343 enter high school and only 72 enter university. And only 23 children out of every 1000 who enter public school graduate from the university.

These facts and others relating to the education of children are presented in a book which we have prepared on the subject. These facts concern both boys and girls—men and women. Many of them will astound you; all of them will interest you.

This book also contains information regarding the cost of education for various professions—tuition and maintenance—at Canadian universities. Every parent should read it.

Most parents plan for their children's education. This book will help you to prepare so that your plans will be carried out. A free copy will be sent to you if you ask for it. Just mail us this coupon giving your name and address.

SENATOR MAKES ATTACK ON C.N.R.

Lynch Staunton Repeats Charges at Nomination Convention in Milton.

ANDERSON TO RUN.

MILTON, Sept. 14 (Canadian Press).—Repeating word for word, his previous charge, that the Canadian National Railway was dishonestly managed, Senator George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., closed his address at the Halton Conservative convention here Saturday with a renewed attack upon Sir Henry Thornton and the government operation of the people's line.

The nomination for the third time was conferred upon Dr. Robert King Anderson, who sat for Halton during the last parliament.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

PROHIBITION.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir: The other day four people met accidentally in a conveyance in the country, not far from Peterborough. Three of the four were ladies, one married and the other two single.

One of the ladies said, for something to say: "You will have the public dances in your village again this winter, I suppose?"

"Oh, no!" replied the lady addressed. "Young men came to them last winter drunk, and broke them up. We are not going to try it this year, but I suppose the old house parties will be revived."

"Not much, they won't!" said No. 3. "Mrs. B—— gave a party the other night, and a lot of uninvited men came to it drunk, and two of them tried to kiss her. She knocked them down—or perhaps they fell down. Her husband got into a fight with another of them, and got badly scratched up. The young men seem to be getting demoralized."

I told this incident to a prominent prohibitionist here in town—one who occupies a high official position in the prohibitionist organization, and he surprised me by going me one better. He said he had been talking to a prominent man in the country, who said that his clergyman had threatened to prevent all dances in his parish, so generally demoralized through drink had son of the people become.

This is what homebrew and bootleg are doing for this country. Forcing people only makes them worse—education and religion are the best remedies, as they always were.

OBSERVER.

Editor of the Examiner,—May I be allowed to express my appreciation of the management of the Grand in making it possible to see two such fine plays as "White Cargo" and "A Little Bit of Fluff" and my surprise that such attractions should be received with poor houses. Particularly in the case of "White Cargo" a play with such a splendid record in London and New York and about which everybody who reads a newspaper must surely have heard. It was surprising to me to find so many empty seats for the attraction which was of a calibre to lead one to expect a packed house. I notice many other fine plays announced for the Grand and I hope the people of Peterboro will give them more liberal patronage lest we find ourselves sidetracked by the worthwhile travelling attractions.

Yours,
Theatregoer.

Church Committee Ignorant Says Birth Control Advocate

CAMBRIDGE, Eng., Sept. 14.— (United Press.)— Suggesting that the Church of England Commission which reported depreciatingly on birth control was ignorant, Dr. P. Sargent, Florence, noted economist, has attacked the report as showing "utter irresponsibility toward our economic future."

"What sort of responsibility are we to expect from the man in the street?" he said, when a committee of churchmen, presided over by the Bishop of Winchester, sitting in solemn conclave, urges families of four or five at least." The complete disregard by this committee of well-to-do churchmen for economic welfare is only equalled by their ignorance of the housing conditions of their less well-to-do churchmen.

Dr. Florence declared that birth control must be exercised or the curve of population would get out of shape.

ARREST 7 FOR BIG MAIL THEFT

Porters Loading Parcel Post Bags on Trains Accused of Stealing Millions.

BUFFALO, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press). — What government and political authorities claim is the largest mail robbery ever attempted in the country was solved Saturday night, with the arrest of seven men and the expected arrest of 15 more, who are all employees of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad in the Main Street postal terminal here.

The thefts have extended over a period of three years and the amount of loot is estimated by the Government officials at more than $2,000,000. Only $100,000 of the stolen property has been recovered.

All the prisoners were employed by the railroad as porters in loading sacks of parcel post mail from the platforms into the trains.

FLOOD SWEEP MANY VILLAGES

Yellow River Floods Caused 3,000 Drownings in Chinese Province.

WATER 50 FEET DEEP.

LONDON, Sept. 14 (United Press).—The Tein Sein correspondent of the Central News Agency reported that the great floods of the Yellow River, sweeping away dykes, had inundated villages in the Show Chang District of Shantung provinces.

Inhabitants of the villages worked frantically for hours to strengthen the dykes, but during the night they crumbled away, pouring an overwhelming flood over a vast area.

At some points the water was said to be fifty feet high while villages for fifty miles around were inundated. The despatch estimates that 3,000 had been drowned.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14 (Canadian Press).—Sixty of 68 Chinese arrested in a round-up by Federal authorities as the result of recent tong outbreaks, were sent to Ellis Island for deportation Saturday, after a hearing before a United States Commissioner.

Only two of the prisoners proved citizenship.

Fewer Unmentionables Worn Garment Trade Is Menaced

NEW YORK, Sept. 14 (United Press).—Hidden in a dry statistical report of a committee on the regional plan of New York and its environs, is contained the startling information that women are wearing less and less under wear, and that the garment industry is menaced by this fact.

"In the last five years, the report says, feminine purchase of those dainty unmentionables has decreased fifty per cent. and of course the market for more sturdy inner garments simply isn't."

All of which has a demoralizing effect upon trade conditions, and accounts for unemployment among the city's garment workers.

Many Gains In Mines During Brisk Session

TORONTO, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Trading on the Standard Mining Exchange was brisk this morning, with transactions totalling 148,673 shares. Tough Oakes and Vipond each advanced two points under heavy sales to 44½ and 116 respectively. Teck Hughes and Keeley were each three points higher, the former at 188 and the latter 151. Castle Trethewey sold four points higher at 108, while Premier advanced six points to 241. Everett was 1 5-8 higher at 6 7-8, and Lorraine 1¼ higher at 11¼. Barry, Holly, Keora and Kirkland Lake each advanced fractionally to 23, 1, 4 7-8 and 41 respectively. Lake Shore declined one point to 630.

Upward Swing Under Lead Of Brazilian

TORONTO, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press). — A further upward swing was made by the market on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning, unusually active under the leadership of Brazilian and Barcelona. Brazilian closed at noon a quarter higher at 72, and Barcelona an eighth higher at 24 1-8. The feature, however, was the further advance of two points, made by Canada Steamships Preferred, which reached 52. Burt Common sold up to 61½, a point and a half gain, and Davies improved a half point. Canadian Canners issues, after an active session, were unchanged and fractionally higher for the Common and Preferred respectively.

Heavy Wheat Movement Forces Prices Lower

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—With the crop movement in Canada reported as likely to increase for some time yet, and with receipts in North Dakota predicted to continue heavy for another month, wheat prices underwent an early set-back to-day. Selling pressure centred at first on May delivery. Soon, however, September delivery, and December as well, receded with May and all three fell to the lowest level on the present downturn. Opening unchanged to 1¼c lower, December 148 to 148 1-4, and May 151 to 151¼, was followed by something of a rally, but then by a general decline to 147 3-8 for December and 150 5-8 for May.

Corn and oats eased down with wheat. After opening unchanged to ⅛c lower, December 84 7-8 to 85 1-8, the corn market dropped all around, December touching 84¼.

Oats started at ¼c off to 1-8c advance, December 42. Later all months showed some loss.

Notwithstanding higher quotations on hogs, provisions lacked support.

Profit Taking Failed To Halt the Upward Movement

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Sporadic bear selling and profit-taking failed to halt the general unward movement of prices in to-day's stock market, which swept forward under the leadership of motor shares. Trading was in substantially increased volume, with indications after midday that to-day's total sales would run close to 2,000,000 shares. Reports of expanding steel operations were reflected in the increased inquiry for U. S. Steel Common, which again crossed 123. The strength of radio shares coincided with the opening of the radio exhibition in New York. Nearly two score issues, including about a dozen motors and accessories, had broken through to new peak prices for the year before the end of the third hour. U. S. Cast Iron Pipe sold six points above last week's final quotation.

CHILDREN'S AID TAG DAY RESULT

Inclement Weather Hurt Receipts and Further Subscriptions Solicited.

The tag day held on Saturday by the Children's Aid Society netted them the sum of $927. Although this amount falls short by about $300 of last year's total, it was a very handsome sum, considering the extremely inclement weather of Saturday.

The agent, G. W. Powell, would be very grateful if all those who were unable to be out on Saturday and contribute to the good cause of the Children's Shelter work, would send any subscription they might intend making to him, at 568 George Street.

The Society wishes to express its sincere thanks to all who contributed on Saturday, to those who assisted in any way, to the ladies who visited the schools, to Mrs. H. Darcey and Mrs. J. Fanning, convenors, and particularly to all who gave their time in such bad weather conditions and did the tagging on the streets.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.

"And there came a great fear upon them and they glorified God, saying, 'A great Prophet has come amongst us'," was the text from St. Luke's Gospel chosen by Rev. J. Finn as the text for the morning sermons at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday.

The miracle of the raising of the widow's son from the grave was the subject of the reverend speaker's discourse. Death is an ordinary affair to the world, which sees its people carried out to the grave in thousands every day. The death of a near and dear relative or friend is often the awakening of that salutary fear of the Lord which has been spoken of as the beginning of wisdom. The fear of God and His wrath will often lead a person to improve his life and strive to spend his time in the friendship of the Lord.

The reverend speaker drew attention to the fact that while Christ, during His earthly sojourn, raised only three people from the dead, He performed many miracles in the way of restoring souls from sinful ways. Death separates the body from the soul, but sin does more: it destroys the union between the soul and God. When Christ ascended into heaven, He left with His apostles the power of forgiving sins.

ALL SAINTS'.

The preacher at the services at All Saints' Church yesterday was the Rev. Wilfred Fuller, of St. Luke's Church, St. John, N.B., a former member of All Saints' Church and Sunday School. Despite the inclement weather, large congregations turned out to hear Mr. Fuller.

The text at the morning service, taken from Second Corinthians xii., 8-9, was "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me 'My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness.'" St. Paul, the writer of these words, said Mr. Fuller, stands out as no other character in all the history of the Christian Church, and Christians would do well to study this great man. This particular event in the life of St. Paul has caused much conjecture. Students have wondered what was the thorn in the flesh about which St. Paul besought the Lord thrice. Each Christian has had a thorn in the flesh which hinders in his work, and they take many forms, any one of which might have been a hindrance to St. Paul.

Temptation to do some great sin might have been troubling St. Paul. He was a very passionate man, thorough in all his works, both before and after his conversion, and any temptation would be terrible in its force. It might have been the antagonism he seemed to arouse in people that was his hindrance. The Jews hated him because he had been one of them, and the Gentiles also were opposed to him. Some physical weakness or disease or a loathsome character which visited him at times might have been his thorn in the flesh.

All these trouble Christians of the present day as much as they did St. Paul, and often it seems that prayer about them is not answered, said Mr. Fuller, but St. Paul had to pray three times before he had an answer, and then it was not the one he expected. He was not promised relief, but was told by the Master, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Many people now look for an answer to prayer but do not get that which they expected, but the Lord has use for them and will help them despite any infirmities.

In the afternoon Mr. Fuller addressed the pupils of the Sunday School at the annual rally day service, from the text, "Speak to the people that they go forward," and urged the scholars and teachers to do their tasks, no matter how small they might seem, using the legend of Christopher as an example.

SPOILED

By Eleanor Hope

Copyright, 1925, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc., Great Britain rights reserved.

Spoiled? Of course he is! And it isn't his fault. The wonder is that he hasn't lost his disposition entirely, through all the fussing and petting. When he was a tiny boy and Mother gave him cookies for being a good boy—that started the spoiling. All the ladies cooed "Isn't he a darling?" So that the ideo of his being perfectly wonderful was implanted early in life. And he never got over it. Now that he's rich and fat and bald, he still looks for the petting. He gets it, too. Riches buy most anything on earth except sincere love. And I think I'd rather hunt for Real Love than shallow flattery—wouldn't you?

Small Women

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—(United Press).—Over fifty per cent. of the women of the United States are what fashion designers term 'small women.' In spite of the fact that the majority of women are small, clothes are made with the normal sized woman in mind.

There are a good many 'don'ts' for the small person to keep in mind when buying frocks. To begin with one must consider the question of one's age. A small eighteen-year-old can afford to accentuate her slenderness and petitness by wearing fluffy, childish frocks. A forty-year-old person of the same size can't afford to be too kittenish. Neither can she attempt to be too mature in her lines.

A short woman should seek clothes that tend to make her look taller. Most of them are apt to look dumpy and fat, although they may be in perfect proportion to their height. The hips of the small woman usually appear too broad for her height. Therefore, dresses that flare at the hips, pocket trimmings, side sashes and other effects that call attention to the hips should be avoided.

On the other hand, a dress should be made loose enough about the hips so that the material doesn't draw when walking or sitting. The bustline should likewise not be accentuated. Dresses should be made ample enough so that they do not pull over the bust. Close fitting sleeves add a slenderness which loose, full sleeves lack. A wide sleeve is designed for the normal or tall woman.

Cross stripes are not for the small figure. Nor are large designs or huge embroidery motifs. One should strive for daintiness, slenderness and grace, selecting materials that are plain or small-figured and lines that are long and graceful. By long lines, one does not mean that the skirt length itself should be long, but that the lines of the frock should be long. Circular hems are not becoming to short figures. Panels, pleats and long unbroken lines are hers. V-shaped necklines are usually more becoming than round ones.

BLACK FOOTWEAR.

Black promises to be very good in the Fall footwear line, competing favorably with the popular brown shades. In satin, patent leather and black kid, the autumn shoes show a strong tendency toward straps, which appear on the majority of the models, and a good deal of stitching is used.

Patent leather, with leather heels of the Cuban and Spanish type, and chain-like stitching, and broad straps, make attractive afternoon shoes; while a sandal-strap patent leather slipper has a unique star-shaped applique of the leather on the vamp. A street shoe of the popular patent inclines to a tailored effect with its plentiful stitching, its broad double-button strap and its Cuban heel, while a side gore pump has a plain vamp, effective cut-out motif and Spanish heel.

A black satin slipper of graceful lines has a single, narrow ankle strap, with a covered Spanish, rubber-tipped heel, and a black satin shoe of novel effect uses fine bands of black calf for a strap and cut-out, and to border the shoe. This model has a low-covered heel.

SECRETS OF CHARM

MAKE YOUR NECK ALLURING.

Have you ever stopped to think how the back of one's neck may be the means of scoring a beauty mark—or very much the opposite?

There is something very alluring about the back of a neck which is really pretty. It gives its owner what may be called a subtle beauty advantage over someone who does not boast such a fortunate possession.

On the other hand, a neck which slopes out into an unlovely bump of fat just below the base of the head is what I consider fatal to real beauty. No matter how soft and white the skin may be, the neck cannot be pretty and delicate in effect if it is married by this undesirable lump of fat.

Especially in this day of bobbed heads, the back of the neck is exposed in a way which is much more prominent than was the older fashion of coiffure, which often called for a knot placed low at the back. Incidentally, this knot could do much to hide the parts of the neck which did not help its beauty score.

The fashion for the inverted V cut at the back of the neck, which allows the shorter hairs to shape down toward the base of the neck in a sort of upturned V, more than ever accentuates the beauty of a shapely neck, or calls attention to the bad points of an unshapely one.

Now I am going to give you a simple exercise by which you can work off this ugly lump of flesh. I have pointed out its disadvantages until I hope every reader who owns such a beauty blemish has fully made up her mind to lose it as soon as possible.

Begin by placing the tips of your fingers on your shoulders. Thus you will have to bend your arms. Your left fingers will be resting lightly on your left shoulder, with your left arm in a bent position, extending straight out from your body. Your right fingers will rest on your right shoulders, with the arm extending out in the same manner.

Now throw your head back. With a circular movement raise your shoulders as high as you can and then lower. By a circular movement I mean describing invisible circles in the air, using your elbows as the pencil point with which you are drawing, as it were.

Keep this movement up for as long as you can without becoming too tired. Follow it by the following treatment:

Dissolve some epsom salts in hot water. Dip a washcloth in this solution and place it on the back of your neck. The water should be as hot as you can stand it, but you should leave it on for several seconds before dipping your cloth in a second time.

Keep this up daily and you will improve the appearance of your neck.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

For about five years I have known a young gentleman and this fall I found I had, what one calls, a crush on him. Well, after I found that out for some reason or other he began to go around with me a bit. However, it was only a "bit" because you see he is my girl friend's steady. When we go car riding he always wants to park and wants to "pet". Should I go with him? I still have my crush but am a little undecided and I would like to know what to do.

ELISABETH.

ELISABETH: If this young man is you girl friend's sweetheart, you are not acting very fairly to either of them, are you, and he is certainly not playing the game squarely. Of course, if, after five years' acquaintanceship, you are attracted to each other, it is probably a sign of a progressive affection that may or may not be real. If you are going to continue going out with him, even only "a bit", you had better break off with your girl friend. An underhand flirtation like this is not fair to any of you. You will just have to decide in your own mind whether you value more the friendship of your girl chum or the "crush" you have on the man. In my opinion, he isn't worth the attention of either of you girls.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl in my early 'teens. I am said to be not too bad looking.

I want to be popular. I have many girl friends but they are not the kind I want. How can I make the kind of friends I want of both sexes. And oblige.

WONDERING.

WONDERING: The main course to follow in seeking to gain the friendship of others is to forget onself. And cultivate the art of listening. There is nothing that the average human enjoys so much as talking, and if you will listen, intelligently, if possible, but always with the appearance of intelligent interest, even if you are bored stiff, then you will be popular. Of course, there are several other little things, like politeness, and consideration for the feelings of others, and cheerfulness, and a bright smile, that helps a lot too. Someone has outlined the following rules, as being especially applicable to young girls:

"Remember that it does not pay to be too sensitive.

"If one hurts your feelings, smile and bear it and see how quickly the hurt goes away.

"Remember to try to please others, and you will find that others please you. Remember always to be cheerful. Misery may love company, but it doesn't get it.

"Remember to be cordial in your appreciation of excellence in others; indifference is a dangerous trait at best."

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

Is it proper to serve punch at an informal party? SALLY.

SALLY: I think fruit punch is a delicious drink to serve at a party, Sally. It is especially refreshing in these warm days, when your guests are rather limp from dancing.

Annie Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of the Examiner and will reply to them in these columns. Letters to Miss Laurie should be addressed to her in care of the Examiner.

TODAY'S FASHION

By Vera Winston

BY VERA WINSTON.

An Evening Frock Made Richer by a Beaded Treatment.

The fact that most of the smartest evening frocks are simple in line does not mean at all that they need be devoid of richness.

The slender, straightline evening frock above ably illustrates the splendor that may be achieved though the line is of the simplest imaginable.

The material itself is gold brocade. This is worn over a white satin slip, and the gold brocade is thickly embroidered in glass beads of red, yellow and green, and in pearls. A pearl choker and earrings, and gold slippers, complete the striking effect.

Fresh as the air —

Those bright-coloured slip-ons, pull-overs and blouses are loveliest if you keep them "fresh as the air." But they must be laundered so carefully.

Harsh bar soaps break down the weave of almost any garment. Particles of it cling to the fabric and rot it. But the mild, foamy Lux suds pressed through and through the soiled parts will make a garment clean and fresh, without harming it in the least.

Remember, if your pretty things are safe in pure water, you need have no fear of them in the mild Lux suds.

NO SOCCER GAMES LAST SATURDAY

Both Grounds Were Found to be Unplayable.

The continued downpour of rain on Saturday prevented the two scheduled games in the Senior and Junior from being played, which was coupled with the fact that the Quaker Oats eleven could not get away from business.

Up on Nicholls Oval, the grass looked the best, but in around the goal areas there was water in abundance. In the latter part of the week, the Quakers executive notified the Woollens that they could not play on Saturday.

Down on King Edward Park, where the Massey versus C.P.C. Charity Cup tie was to take place looked like a lake in the goal terrtitory, although some of the boys spiked the ground so as to run away the water but it failed to make any impression. Like the Senior game, this one also will be played at some future date.

YOUNG PEOPLE HAD FINE CORN ROAST

U.F.Y.P.O. Club of Bailieboro Enjoyed Pleasant Outing.

BAILIEBORO, Sept. 14.—The U.F.Y.P.O. club held a corn roast at Barnard's Landing on Thursday evening, and about seventy-five of the members and friends enjoyed a very pleasant evening together.

Two huge bon-fires were built on the lake shore, one for boiling the corn and the other for roasting the marshmallows and corn. There was abundance of corn, marshmallows, pies and cakes supplied and everyone did full justice to all these dainties sitting around the fires. While all were eating their fill a motor trip was discussed among the members. The members of the club are planning to take a motor trip back north sometime in the near future.

At the conclusion of the corn roast the young folks played various games, and danced on the green to music provided by a victrola.

Among those who were present were:

Misses S. Rutherford, M. Dawson, K. Waterman, M. Weir, B. Wood, E. Huggins, M. Wood, F. Telford, M. Emberson, M. Greer, V. White, A. Hunter, G. Hutchison, L. Barnard, I. Dawson, D. Falls, E. Tate, I. On Thursday afternoon the W. M.S. of the United church here held a quilting bee on the lawn of Mrs. Ira Dawson.

Nineteen ladies gathered to quilt the quilts for the missionary boxes and four quilts were quilted during the afternoon.

Tea was served on the spacious lawn at five thirty.

The ladies of the United W.M.S. here are doing a splendid work for the mission fields, both in supplying money and materials.

Winner of the Hopeful and United States Hotel stakes, Pompey went to the post a 13 to 10 favorite. He covered the Futurity distance in the fast time of 1:23.

INSIDE Ggolf.

By CHESTER HORTON

Maker of 51 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

Just how loose is the golfer during the back swing, and just how right isn't he? Golfers are cautioned to "loosen up" until, as a matter of fact, they make themselves entirely too loose, for it is true you cannot hit the ball solidly when you are as loose as all that. Too tight implies that the player becomes stiff and rigid. Usually this rigidity can be plainly felt in the shoulders, when it perhaps is not noticed in the wrists and arms. There is a point midway between these two that is hardly possible of definite description. Each player finds it for himself. Some very good golfers appear to be very tight—Laurie Ayton is one of them. Others appear extremely loose—Mac Smith is in this class. You can usually find the right degree by using the golf club pretty much as you would use a hammer. Throw it through the ball as if it were a weight or hammer. This practice leads to ryhthm too, which is always useful in golf.

RUGBY SQUAD OF M.A.A.A. TESTED

Mundell of Queen's Candidate for Quarter—Outside Wings Look Fast.

MONTREAL, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—Some indication of what may be expected from the Montreal Rugby Football Club in the Inter-Provincial series this Fall was exhibited to a small group of fans who braved the weather Saturday afternoon and clustered, at the M.A.A.A. gridiron. Coach Nicholson sent a probable first team against substitutes, the first team blanking the subs, 13-0.

Nicholson trotted out a first-string line which is the equal to any which has represented the Wheelers in the past three or four seasons. But it was the outside wing position and the back division which has been causing the most worry and in these departments there was enough uncovered to somewhat lighten the worries of the coach and his assistants.

Clary Booth was used to boot the ball Saturday. Under conditions it was difficult to judge his real worth, but with wet ball, he was getting good height and distance and there was a consistency in his efforts in punting, the rugged half has developed far since last year and with further coaching should be able to fill the role satisfactorily.

In Consiglio, Pete Mill, Dune Anderson and Frank Robinson, the Wheelers have a quartette of outsides who show possibilities, being good tacklers and for the most part fast.

The main points, however, were the displays given by Chick Mundell, former Queen's star, who ran the first squad from the quarter-back division, and by Keith Carruthers, oarsman, hurdler and now football candidate, who filled in at flying wing in the absence of Jeff Russell. Mundell looks like the best prospect the Winged Wheelers have had at the key positions in many season.

But it was Carruthers who proved the most likely find. Six feet tall, weighing 185 pounds and with speed to burn, Carruthers was the star of the practice.

TILDEN AVERTS NEAR DISASTER

Won Three Straight Sets From Lacoste After Losing Two.

BAROTRA BEATEN

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 14.—(Canadian Press).—"Big Bill" Tilden pulled himself back from the brink of defeat Saturday after coming as close to slipping into the abyss as at any previous time in his career of dazzling finishes.

Fought to a standstill for the second time within three days of the Davis Cup play by a young Frenchman—this time by the 20-year-old Rene Lacoste, champion of Wimbledon—the king of United States tennis players, battled his way uphill to win by scores of 3-6, 10-12, 8-6, 7-5, 6-2, in a gripping three-hour struggle that had few parallels.

Four times in the third set, Tilden was within a point of sustaining straight set defeats, but on each occasion the tall, gaunt champion was equal to the task of averting disaster.

Although equally as startling, in a different sense, it was something of a climax to this epic battle when William M. Johnston crushed Jean Borotra in the fifth and final match of the three-day series by scores of 6-1, 6-4, 6-0.

"Little Bill" was in rare form and in less than an hour his hurricane attack overwhelmed the "Bounding Basque," the heroic star who had extended Tilden to five thrilling sets two days before.

These two triumphs gave the United States a clean sweep of the challenge round series for the second straight year.

"You won't leave me, Bob?" he pleaded pathetically, clinging to Bob's arm.

"No," said Bob simply. "I'll see you through, old man!"

"Afterwards——" Jim nodded with a wan smile, "I'll go away with you. I'll never accept—that baby—it killed—its mother. It has killed its father, too."

Mrs. O'Leary, alone in the little parlor, uprose to meet them from the armchair in which she had kept a fitful vigil through the night. Her kindly eyes fixed on Jim's face with concern, and gleamed with relief when she saw that he was crying.

"Won't you take the little one now, Jimmy boy?" she smiled sorrowfully, proffering the infant.

Jim's grief seemed on the point of congealing again, as without glancing at the baby, he repulsed it, and walked to the mantel where he stood with his soul dissolving out of his eyes as he stared at a framed picture of his wife; which, Bob saw, was the same as the one in the mail car. Bob moved up and stood beside Jim; looking at the picture, too, and with eyes that without any foreknowledge on his part were also wet.

"About the—kid——" he began humbly, in a low monotone, avoiding with the instinctive psychology of man to man comforting any direct or influencing look at Jim or any tone of sentimental pleading, "there's this to remember, old man. He was—your wife's happiest desire. She paid a damnably big price for him. Her flesh—her blood—her bones—live on in him. There's too much of her—in him—for you to turn him down, Jim. Taking care of him is the price you'll have to pay to redeem her sacrifice."

It was a queer scene in that little room, hallowed by the ancient sacrifice that had been made by the one now no longer warm with life—with the shabby and unshaven hobo, a wanderer on life's fringes, dominating a homely little everyday tragedy.

Bob quickly lifted the picture from the mantel and held it close to Jim, who made a loving but futile effort to see it through his film of tears.

"Look at this picture, Jim—then look at that baby!" Bob counseled gently, again prompted somehow by an inner fancy that he could not understand himself.

Great quivers shook Jim as he stepped unsteadily to Mrs. O'Leary and, bending over the infant, tried to see its face, which was thus baptized in the clean tears of his father's agony.

With quick, hungry tenderness he lifted the baby into his thin arms, then turned and looked at Bob streamingly.

"Looks—just—like his mother," he sobbed proudly.

CHAPTER IV.

"You probably haven't forgotten, Bob," said Jim one day about three weeks after his wife's funeral, "that I told you I was going away with you—on the road, anywhere, everywhere—just as soon as things here were settled."

Bob nodded from a comfortably indolent position flat upon his back with a humorous foreknowing twinkle in his eye, though his face remained gravely attentive, and he looked at Jim expectantly.

"Well," said Jim honestly and without a trace of sheepishness, "I can't go through with it."

The two men were seated on the neat green lawn of the little postage stamp backyard of the Fowler cottage, in the limpid sunshine of a rare June day, making woeful efforts to retrieve their boyhood skill at mumbly-peg. It was these little artifices that Bob, in his interest and liking for the slender, almost effeminately intense, mail clerk, had contrived during the acute days of Jim's bereavement to keep him out of dangerous moods of ingrowing melancholic brooding to which he was predisposed.

"I don't know what drove you out to roam, Bob; but I've seen enough of the fine man in you to know that it must have been something big—something that justified you. But I'm not like you. The open, ribbony roads that wind over distant hills don't lure me—even now. But from the wistful longing I've seen in your eyes, sometimes when we've been walking and I've caught you staring off to the horizon, I know they've got a powerful drag for you; and that's made me appreciate what it cost you to stay here—to help me——"

"Your chance," said Bob, handing him the rusty penknife, "I missed. It's 'backies' for you this time—you're two ahead of me!"

Jim was not to be distracted. "You're made for that sort of thing," he continued, "I'm not. You're hard. I'm soft——"

Bob looked up sharply from his dissembling efforts to smooth down the pricked turf, smiling over a sudden realization that Jim had unwittingly uncovered a truth: which was, that there was a good deal of the protective "big brother" impulse in his affection for Jim.

"My five hundred mile run on the Limited Mail is vagabondage enough for me," Jim went on, with a wry smile. "Anyhow, I've been thinking it over a lot the last few days, and it just came to me once and for all as we sat here. It's no use, Bob, I'd be leaving—her——"

"Didn't think you'd pull out with me," said Bob laconically after a brief silence punctuated by their careless flipping of the knife into the grass. "Hoped you wouldn't, too. Because, old man, when it comes right down to it Mrs. O'Leary might make a good foster mother for the kid, but she can't take the place of—his mother. That's your job—mother and father, both! No, you're not leg loose, like me, old man!"

Sudden apprehension, an anticipatory fear of loneliness, dimmed Jim's eyes as he grasped Bob's hand, stopping him in the act of throwing the knife, and stammered:

"You, Bob—you're not—thinking of——"

"I'm thinking I want to be—on my way. There's nothing more here I can do. You're leave is up this week-end and you'll be going back to work on Monday's run. I've lived on you all this time, Jim—eaten your food, worn your clothes. I'm a liability and I'm going to liquidate myself by becoming scarce," he finished with a short laugh.

Jim got to his feet with grim determination and stood over Bob, frowning, like a defense advocate before a bar of last appeal.

"Bob Wilson, you've done all the preaching around here for nearly a month, so now I claim the right to crowd in a few words. I've guessed you've been in some big trouble, but I know by your manner, your speech, you—everything—that you stand head and shoulders above the average citizen of this town—that you've been accustomed to the best and not to the meanest of this world's goods. I don't know or care why you choose to drift, but I wish you'd let me be your anchor. I haven't any right to butt into your plans for your own life—but God, Bob in a little over three short weeks I've come to love you as a brother."

DISHES FROM INDIAN GRAVES ARE USED BY POOR FAMILIES

Burial Customs of Western Tribes Live Despite New Education.

DEAD HOUSES EMPTY.

After Funeral the Need of Corpse For Utensils Appears Weak.

Eating food cooked in pots and pans taken from an Indian grave where they had been piled around the body would not appeal to most Easterners. But there are Indians, and even white families, in the drought stricken area in Southern Alberta who think nothing of it, and the casual traveller who accepts the hospitality so freely offered in the cattle country little thinks, and therefore worries not, that his coarse iron-stone crockery and his untinned cutlery are loot from the ragged Indian burying place.

On the main road from Calgary to the Crow's Nest Pass the automobile tourist passes through Macleod, a junction point on the C.P.R., and from thence follows the road as it wanders over the bald-headed prairie that forms the Peigan Indian Reservation. Through the reserve runs one lone depression, in places almost a ravine, in which flows the swift Old Man River, steadily wearing away the soil from under the squalid huts that house the red men on its banks. Every little while, when the water pours down in heightened volume from the Rockies, forty miles away, twenty or thirty tons of earth from the bank topples over into the muddy flood to be carried away from the diminishing domains of the red men to pile up mud banks where the river widens and slows at Macleod. Peigan, a mere platform's a station, and Brocket, where a white station agent keeps open house for the mounties who visit him, and the two white storekeepers who on treaty money day wage generous battle for the custom of their dusky traders, are passed with their groups of unimposing shacks, and a half mile past Brocket the end of the reserve is reached as the road drops suddenly into the river bottom and winds its way to Pincher Creek and ont to Cardston, the home of a magnificent Mormon temple.

Just on this boundary of the reserve is the burial ground. On a rocky eminence on the left of the roadway the observant tourist may see pieces of broken boxes making weird pictures against the skyline, and the roofs of two small huts make the uninitiated think of chicken coops amid the littler of a neglected and deserted farm yard. The broken boxes are the caskets in which the mothers and fathers of the present generation of the reserve Indians were buried under a covering of rock, now lying opened by human prowlers and scattered by carrion-eating coyotes. The huts are the dead-houses in which chiefs were laid in their last rest as though in a bedroom, and a glance inside one shows the darkened skeleton lying on mouldy springs and surrounded by boxes and scattered human treasures. Once jealously guarded by the survivors and preserved from desecration by the threat of certain death that hung over he disturber of their slumbers, the Indian dead are now subject to the cupidity and insults of a younger generation, bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh.

Near a fence that has been the graveyard form the well-tilled fields of the white man's territory a tiny moccasin, rotting on its flesh-stripped limb, shows where lies a child on whom a woman, though Indian, lavished care and love. If the mother, passing that way, sees the little foot in its pathetic loneliness, what she thinks or whether it makes an appeal to her cannot be read through the stoical mould of her features.

The dead-houses, once crowded with the treasures accumulated by the inhabitants during their lives, are now located and denuded of anything worth carrying away. In one even the bones have been swept to the floor and the bed carried off to supply the wants of some family. Boxes that contained rich beaded ornaments and costumes, symbolizing the [illegible] are empty and the [illegible] Saddles, head-dresses of gaily co[illegible]ps, halters, robes, medicine pipes, bows, arrows, moccasins, and the host of wonderfully beaded articles that formed the possessions of the Indian chief of two generations ago and were hung on the walls of his last house to serve him in the Happy Hunting Grounds, have been taken by plundering hands. Dishes that were left for his service are used on the tables of white conquerors of the country, and dried meat that was to sustain him on his journey was greedily gulped by wandering prairie wolves that fattened on what they found in the opened dead-house.

Surrounding the dead-houses are the graves of the ordinary Indians, whose rough boxes have also been stripped of anything of use or value.

Whites Not Helped.

In one poverty stricken home near the cemetery, three grown-ups and five children yearly face the gaunt spectre of starvation. The Indians who live on the reservation go weekly to the Government agency and receive their allowance of meat and flour, but these whites have no such relief. Their children are unable to attend school because they have no clothes or shoes. And the adults work year after year, ploughing, harrowing, sowing and cultivating, but never reaping. The blazing sun that beats down day after day from a cloudless sky, and the winds like blasts from an open furnace that sweep through the Crow's Nest Pass wither the grain before it is ripe and scorch it a few inches high. Only in a patch of garden to which they carry water in pails is there any growth, and on the produce of this meagre square they practically live.

But they are hospitable. In her home-made and made-over dress the youthful-looking mother welcomes the chance traveller and sets before him the best her ingenuity can conjure from her small resources.

After such a meal her husband confessed to the visitor that nearly every dish and cooking utensil in the house was from the Indian burying ground. The Indians had no need of them and he had, and his dire poverty overcame the repulsion he must have felt toward the plundering and use of these articles that had been packed closely around the bodies of Indians.

Not only the occasional white man, but the Indians themselves, have taken to relieving the dead of useless impediments. Originally the Indians laid their dead in trees or on platforms out of reach of prowling animals, but on the arrival of the white man they so far adopted his methods as to lay the bodies in boxes in convenient depressions and pile stones upon them. While they still place utensil and treasure into the boxes with the bodies, it is comparatively easy to remove the stones when grief has so far subsided as to permit the relatives to regret the loss of the articles. And it does not take long, sometimes, as witness the case of Three Guns, whose funeral cortege was one of the biggest in the memory of present-day Indians. First in the procession came a grain wagon in which reposed the body, wrapped in patchwork quilts, tied with rope, and securely nailed in a box made of one inch plank. It is necessary to go into these gruesome details in order to indicate how difficult it would be to reach Three Guns' pocket. Next in line was another farm wagon with the chief mourners and the necessary implement for the interment, and after that a row of various rigs and cars. After the interment the mourners departed decorously, having heaped stones high on the box and placed on top a valued treasure of the dead man, a tomahawk he carried when he was initiated at the Sun Dance in his youth.

The night was spent in mourning in his immediate family before the semi-circle in the dust of their floor that was their altar, and next day the weary round of living was taken up.

That night certain members of the family visited the graveyard, armed with a gooseneck crowbar, and sought the grave of Three Guns. They were too late. While they mourned on the previous night the body had been disinterred, unwrapped, and the money that Three Guns took in his trouser pocket to pay old man Charon to ferry him over the creek to the happy hunting ground had been taken. The best of his pots and pans too had disappeared.

Even in his coffin the old Indian had been expertly rolled, and while certain distant relatives who left the house of mourning early were suspected the culprits were never definitely uncovered.

SAYS CRERAR WRONG

In the course of an interview E. J. McMurray, M.P. for North Winnipeg and former solicitor-general in the King Government, declared: "I certainly do not agree with the political opinions expressed by Mr. Crerar in his prepared statement or given out to the press. And I would like to see the man with any real knowledge of Canadian politics who does. It surely is a case of the wish being father to the thought, and will certainly find no response in Western Canada."

The Watertown, N.Y., Daily Times has the following to say about a local pacer:

"Mr. Healy, the bay pacer owned by Stanley Blewett of Peterborough, Ontario, in Trainer Bowen's string, is a worthy scion of the Anglo-Saxon nation. He carried the Union Jack to victory again Thursday afternoon, for the second time this week at the County Fair races, putting down three ones in succession in the 2.24 pace. Tuesday, as an added starter, he cleaned up his American cousins in the 2.30 pace, to which he was then eligible.

"Nothing could head him Thursday in a field of five rivals. Of the six starters, Cegantle Girl was singled out by the fortune as the pole horse. Beside her scored Myrtle R., then Nellie parole, Mr. Healy and Derby Arrow, with Comity on the extreme end."

THEATRES

AT THE GRAND

THE ORIGINALS IN "THUMBS UP."

Canada's famous Company of talented soldier artists, known the Dominion over as "The Originals," will appear here at the Grand Opera House to-night and Tuesday, Sept. 14th and 15th, in their sensational new musical production, "Thumbs Up." Reports of this latest revue indicate that "Thumbs Up" is a hummer, by far the best offering the Originals have ever brought to town, and the cast includes all the favorites of last season, including Gene Pearson, the phenomenal male soprano; Bob Anderson, the comedian of originality; our old friend, Jmmie Goode, Canada's foremost blackface comedian who returns to the cast of the Originals this season; Alan Murray, Lionel Broadway and Percy Campbell who this year is appearing on the stage for the first time since the old days in France; Jerry Brayford; Bertram Langley; Thomas Dunn; Stuart Callaghan, a new and extremely clever toe dancer; while the musical destinies are directed by the capable Leonard Young, of "Duchess" fame.

Gene Pearson, "The Male Galli Curci," is rightly entitled to this name, for he has a natural soprano voice of marvellous purity and beauty, and uses it with rare facility and charm. It is certainly no exaggeration to say that there is no female impersonator before the public with such a command of voice and marvellous stage appearance—there has been none since the old days of "The Male Patti" in Europe.

Bob Anderson, who became famous almost over night, last season, has a tremendous following among fun lovers by reason of his spontaneity and clever character comedy. Alan Murray has always been noted for his ability as a dancer and general artistry. Jerry Brayford, with his fine voice; Bertram Langley, of the deep bass; Lionel Broadway, the company's extremely popular juvenile of "Night Time" fame, are all very clever entertainers.

The re-appearance of Jimmie Goode with the Originals this year has met with much favorable comment. Jimmie is very popular with theatre-goers everywhere the Originals have ever played, and the reception accorded him in "Thumbs Up" is proof of his great popularity. He has a brand new line of darkey humour which is a scream from start to finish.

Percy Campbell, the Originals' former business manager, is indeed a welcome addition to the cast. Mr. Campbell is appearing with the incomparable quartette, which is such a popular feature of this organization, and his many friends throughout Canada are pleased to see him appearing on stage at last.

"A LITTLE BIT OF FLUFF."

"A Little Bit of Fluff," one of those most amusing but impossible little farce comedies, of the "Charley's Aunt" school, where the chief fun is provided by repeated cases of mistaken identity, was the Saturday attraction at the Grand and afternoon and evening audiences enjoyed the laughable situations, and complications into which the characters managed to get themselves. The play of course was written for laughing purposes only—that is its chief mission—and while it is impossible to conceive in real life of any set of people being so inanely stupid as to make the mistakes in identification that supply the fun in "A Little Bit of Fluff," yet the cast headed by Mr. Francis Compton and Miss Peggy Dundas succeeded in making the production convincing and enjoyable, and the outbursts of laughter were both spontaneous and frequent.

Incidentally the company was under the management of Mr. Frank E. Traynor, well remembered as a sergeant in the 93rd Regiment Battalion, who went overseas with the Peterboro County Battalion, and was transferred to the 21st Battalion.

Of the plot it is not necessary to say much. "A Little Bit of Fluff" has been done here before, and besides is well known to Old Country people who saw it on the other side of the Atlantic.

The chief honors were carried off by Mr. Compton, who proved a unctious comedian, with a full appreciation of the fun-making possibilities of the role of Bertra. Tully. His picture of the timid mission worker pitchforked into a series of distressing complications, was cleverly etched. Mr. Herbert Leslie, in the other principal male role, also contributed an excellent performance, although one could wish that he would not so persistently fling his arms about wit every speech. Miss Dundas was the Mamie Scott of this production. Miss Catharine McDonough did well as Miss Ayers, and the other roles were in adequate hands.

To-night the Grand will present the Originals in their latest revue, "Thumbs Up." The old favorites will get a warm reception.—F. D. C.

AT THE ROYAL.

TWO ADDED ATTRACTIONS AT ROYAL TO-NIGHT.

Besides the "County Store Novelty," held every Monday night, another surprise will be "sprung" to-night—a real wild and woolly cowboy, expert with the lassoo and all the cowboy tricks in roping, also fire eating and cowboy pastimes. See him on the street and you'll know he's the real article. Alaska Jake is here to-night, also Tuesday and Wednesday.

"LADY ROBINHOOD" AT THE ROYAL.

Romance, mystery, color and a vivid personality which stands out like a splash of crimson against a gray mist, are some of the ingredients of "Lady Robinhood," which will be shown for the first time here at the Royal Theatre to-day. For the thrilling and brilliant elements of the story, Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins are responsible, and for one of the finest characterizations of an unusual type ever registered on the silver sheet, movie fans have to thank little Evelyn Brent, who casts off the crook roles with which she has lately been invested and portrays the title role in such a way that it is a positive triumph.

BETTY BRONSON FEATURED IN "ARE PARENTS PEOPLE?"

She's a sage little girl, in blue-eyed, brown-haired Betty Bronson, with more wisdom in her thoughts than one usually finds in a seventeen year-old girl.

Malcolm St. Clair, director, and Florence Vidor and Adolphe Menjou, co-featured with the heroine of "Peter Pan" in "Are Parents People?" were discussing incompatibility as it applies to married life. There was a reason, for in this Paramount picture they are married, and they are decidedly incompatible. Betty, who was sitting nearby on the set, overheard the conversation.

Without in the least intruding she gave her opinion.

"I believe that half of the responsibility in keeping a home happy depends upon the children," she said. "If a child is not quarrelsome, but maintains a serene, pleasant disposition when things go wrong, it is enough to make the parents ashamed of themselves when they nag each other."

"Out of the mouths of babes cometh wisdom," commented Menjou, and the discussion broke up.

"Are Parents People?" which is the feature at the Capitol Theatre to-day, was adapted for the screen by Frances Agnew from the Saturday Evening Post serial by Alice Duer Miller, author of "Manslaughter." The picture is a true-to-life domestic comedy. Others in the cast are Lawrence Gray, new Paramount "find"; Emily Fitzroy, Andre de Beranger, Mary Beth Milford and William Courtwright.

HARRY COBB IS PRIZE WINNER

MOST ATTRACTIVE.

Harry Cobb, window dresser of the Cressman Company, Limited, has just been informed of his success in a window-dressing competition held recently under the auspices of the Man's Wear Review, in connection with a campaign put on by the leading clothing houses of Canada to broadcast their slogan, "Dress well and succeed."

This competition was open to the Dominion, and entrants from all over Canada took part in it. It was divided into three sections, according to population, and Group Three was won by a window arranged by Mr. Cobb. The write-up of the exhibit describes the window as "one of the most attractive in the competition. Everything stood out. It bore the fine traces of the artist's hand."

POLICE TESTIFY FOR M. FRANCOIS

Acting Chief of Police James Reid Tells of Blindfold Driver.

Acting Chief of Police Reid, who was a member of the trio of citizens who accompanied Francois on his tour of the city streets on Saturday morning, when the blindfolded driver guided his car by mental telepathy, without a word being spoken to him during the entire hour, has given the following letter to Francois' manager:

"James Espin, Esq., Manager for the great Mr. Francois:

"Dear Sir: You requested me to give you a letter, stating how I found Mr. Francois driving around the city of Peterborough, while he was blindfolded, and along that line I hereby certify that on the 12th day of September, 1925, between the hours of 10 a.m., and 11 a.m., Miss K. McCarthy, a staff reporter of the Peterborough Evening Examiner, Mr. Dennis Maloney, 388 Roger street, Peterborough, and myself, sat in the back seat of a Chevrolet car, while Mr. Francois, who accompanied us, sat alone in the front seat of the Chevrolet car, and drove it for nearly an hour through the business thoroughfares of the city of Peterborough, BLINDFOLDED.

"While Mr. Francois was driving this car through the busy streets of this city, blindfolded, neither Miss McCarthy, Dennis Maloney, or myself, spoke a word or made any signals, or gave any instructions whatever to Mr. Francois or anyone, while Mr. Francois sat in the front seat of the car alone, and drove it.

"Before Mr. Francois started on his trip through out city, I thoroughly blindfolded him myself by putting cotton batting over both eyes, fastened to his head with adhesive tape, and covered with a thick black bandage of six layers of cloth. Before adjusting this bandage, which I could not see through, I showed it to others in the crowd, none of whom could possibly see throuhg it; then I pinned it tightly around his head, in the presence of a large number of people, thus blindfolding him completely.

"After this was done, Mr. Francois drove the Chevrolet car, accompanied by Miss McCarthy, Mr. Dennis Maloney and myself, through the busy streets of the city of Peterborough, with the greatest skill and ability, and I can honestly and conscientiously say that there was not the slightest chance of causing an accident. Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. REID.
Acting Chief Constable."

PETAIN MEETS ABD-EL-KRIM IN BATTLE AT BIBANE TO-DAY IN FIRST TEST OF STRENGTH

Entrenched Mountain is Decided as Meeting Place of Armies.

FRENCH READY.

Rebel Riffs Retire, Leaving Behind Many Peace-Making Parties.

PARIS, Sept. 14.—The first test of strength between Marshal Petain and Abd-El-Krim is to be at Bibane, the entrenched mountain north of the Ouergha River, filled with picked Riffian troops combined with the Beni Zeroual and lesser tribes bordering the Ouergha to the north.

Petain has accepted Abd-El-Krim's challenge to battle here, refusing to move forward over the easily conquered mountains along the remainder of the forty-mile Ouergha front until he has had a trial of strength with the regular troops of the Riff. Battle is likely to take place to-day.

Up the valleys toward the Riff mountains from the Ouergha French columns have been chasing bands of tribesmen who stopped only long enough en route to burn villages and drive off cattle, leaving behind to make peace with the French those local tribesmen who were unwilling to go with them.

This peace-making, the most important detail of the French advance into Riff territory, is an impressive ceremony requiring luxurious silk tents sumptuously fitted, where Moulat Mahmou, brother of the Sultain is sitting with General De Chambrun to receive submissions to the Sultan.

At Mjara, where this performance is taking place, there has been a series of negotiations, the tribesmen bargaining furiously before submitting.

Another picturesque event was at Amjot, which not only is the political headquarters of the Beni Zeroual whom the French are trying hard to bring again into submission, but is a holy place—Zaouia — famed throughout Islam. The Riff mountaineers, less versed in Islamic lore than less isolated hill and valley Beni Zeroual, made a mistake when they took Amjot last spring by looting the sanctuary.

The religious brotherhood of Chorfas, who are responsible for Zaouia, told the Riffians on that occasion that Allah would punish them, and when the French recaptured the place they declared to the Sultan's representatives that Abd-El-Krim had been cursed for violating the holy place.

EXHIBITION NOTES

The Post Office exhibit will again be one of the features of the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition. Postmaster Lacheur and his assistants have prepared a regular post office, where stamps may be obtained and letters mailed. In addition there will be a moving picture, showing proper methods of addressing and wrapping mail matter, and other pointers intended to enable the Post Office to function more efficiently. The exhibit of undeliverable letters, which has attracted much attention in former years, will be repeated this year.

As his first guiding star to direct thinking Canadians to a solution of the problems, Mr. Wearing suggested education, explaining that it was necessary that Canadians should know the truth about the problems of their country. He condemned the politicians of all parties for not so educating the people instead of feeding them nothing else than claptrap when they took to the stump during political campaigns, and wished that the leaders of to-day would speak as did Howe and MacDonald and Tupper and Laurier.

Fraternalism was the next star mentioned, a recognition of the fact that no matter their creed or calling or racial origin, Canadians were fellow-citizens of a great country being suggested by Mr. Wearing as essential.

Lastly, he urged co-operation among all classes for Canada's benefit: co-operation based on imagination and vision that were capable of visualizing the country Canada might be.

Rotarian R. G. Kingan presided to-day, and there was a large attendance.

Rotarian Andrew Brown was instructed to co-operate with the Kiwanis Club in entertaining the crippled children on a visit to the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition.

HALF MILE MIDWAY FOR THE BIG FAIR

Call at Exhibition Grounds Free To-morrow Night and See It's No Dream.

A midway half a mile long pulled into Peterboro this morning and set up its tents and stands at the Exhibition Ground in preparation for the big Fair that opens to-morrow. Nothing like it has ever been seen in Peterboro before. Every year has been bigger and better but this year surpasses them all by so much that the time-worn phrase does not tell the half. A passing view of the preparations going forward at the Exhibition Grounds shows that the Fair directors have been altogether too modest in their advertising. And it is almost possible that they themselves are surprised by the magnitude and completeness of the show they have been instrumental in bringing here.

And then the vaudeville. Al Sweet and Singing Huzzar Band have been billed as the headliners. Undoubtedly this aggregation will give something new in the way of music, but it is not the whole show. There are half a dozen other big acts which will delight Peterboro people with their comedy, skill and stunts, including Tice and his comedy dogs; the Four Pierrots and the De'Liberto Brothers with their teeter board act. Not one of these is of the ordinary variety of vaudeville. The Board of Directors decided in January that something out of the ordinary should be presented this year, and they have succeed in obtaining it, thanks to the m in charge of amusements, Reg. Turner.

There's something for everybody, and nobody can afford to miss everything the Exhibition offers.

DIED

LEACH.— The death occurred on the 13th day of September, of Irene Alice Leach, 11 months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leach, of 39 New Romaine street.

The funeral will take place at 11 o'clock from the house to the Little Lake cemetery, with Rev. Mr. Patterson officiating.

FACTS ABOUT OPTOMETRY

The Prevalence Of Far-Sight

It is the opinion of Optometrists that this error of vision is more often met with than any other. And in addition to being so prevalent, it is very detrimental. It is present in all ages, the majority of children being to some extent far-sighted. There is but one way to correct far-sight—placing glasses before the eyes that remove the error. We have success in such cases.

DIRECTORS DELIGHTEDLY DIG ONE ANOTHER'S RIBS AS BIG FAIR GETS ITS FINAL TOUCH

Meeting Last Night Showed Workers Satisfied With Work Well Done.

BEST EVER KNOWN

This Year's Fair is in a Class by Itself—Most Wonderful Midway.

Loose ends were gathered up and final arrangments made last night for the zero hour that marks the opening tonight of the twenty-third annual Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. President Roland Denne presided at a special meeting of the directors at the Exhibition ground, at which nearly every member of the Board was present. Many came from miles out in the country; many left work that would have netted them much personal gain; all gave up something of time, money or effort. They were like a lot of school boys building a snow fort or a log house—carried away with enthusiasm and tickled to death with the success of their efforts. And now that they have finished their task they want everyone in Peterborough county and Peterborough City to come and have a look at it.

Why They Smile.

And it is well worth seeing. The directors have secured, through the good work of Webber Turner, Chairman of the Amusement Committee, the biggest midway that ever visited Peterborough. There are twenty-two train coach loads of apparatus and it took eight Pullman coaches to accommodate the artists, workmen and stage managers of the mammoth exposition. Fifty-two wagon loads of canvas and exhibits were hauled to the Exhibition grounds. There are seven big rides, including two or three that have never before been seen here. Many of the side shows are exactly the same as those boasted this year by the Canadian National Exhibition, and some are here that were missing from the big Ex. midway.

The directors have also arranged the best vaudeville in the Exhibition's history, including seven big acts besides Al. Sweet and his singing Hussar Band; Francois, the mental telepathy marvel, who will drive blindfold around the speedway; and a Military Ride that many believe will take the honors.

The dog show has received so many entries that yesterday the committee applied for a second tent, 80 feet by 100 feet, and it seemed likely that even this increased accommodation will be crowded. The entries are of a better class than

WEATHER

There was a particularly brilliant display of Northern Lights last evening shortly before eight o'clock, the whole heavens being a mass of quivering vari-colored streamers, while in the north the display bore a close resemblance to pictures of the Aurora Borealis in the books of Arctic exploration. The Northern Lights are one of the mysteries of nature, and science has not yet solved that mystery. These lights apparently emanate from the magnetic pole (not the true pole) and while a display is in progress in the north, a similar display is taking place at the antipodes. While there is a dispute as to the ownership of the North Pole, there is none as to the magnetic pole. It has been definitely located, and is on Canadian soil, in the frozen north. While the display last night was of short duration, it was beautiful while it lasted.—W. P.

CONFERENCE ON ECONOMY ASKED BY FRENCHMAN

Louis Loucheur Introduces a Resolution Into League Assembly.

NOT BIG MEETING.

Draft Conventions Not Needed, But Number of General Principles.

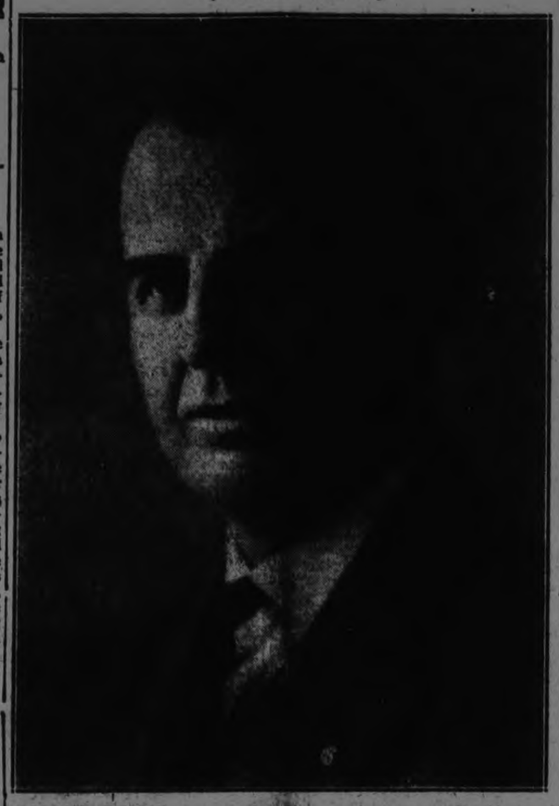
GENEVA, Sept. 15 (Canadian Press)—A resolution looking to the convocation of an international economic conference was introduced in the Assembly of the League of Nations today by Louis Loucheur, speaking for France.

Loucheur declared the conference did not necessarily have to be a large one or have to result in drawing up a series of draft conventions. It might simply lay down a number of general principles.

During his speech he referred to the growth of "Economic Nationalism" since the war, resulting in the erection of tariff walls and other barriers. He reviewed the League's work in effecting monetary stability, saying its progress in restoring Austria and Hungary financially had blazed the trail for the conference now proposed by France. He warns against too vast a program saying, however, that it would be desirable to frame an agreement assuring equilibrium of consumption and production.

PETERBOROUGH EXHIBITION PRESIDENT

Head of Fair Board Has Gathered Round Him Sixty Enthusiasts Who Help Him Push Big Show to Success —Dynamic Personality.



ROLAND DENNE, now serving his seventh term as President of Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. He has worked indefatigably in the interests of Peterborough's big annual show, co-ordinating the work of many committees into a perfect harmony of effort, building always in view of continuous growth. To-day he sees opened the biggest show of all, one that approaches very near to perfection. "It's a fairyland," Mayor Turner said last night of the grounds. "It has never been so good before," was the verdict of City Engineer R. H. Parsons.

Roland Denne did it through the goodwill and splendid efforts of the sixty men he has welded into a smooth working, enthusiastic organization—the livest in Peterborough—and by virtue of his own personal magnetism and management.

CHRISTIANS ARE DEPORTED FROM MOSUL BY TURKS

Report Says Troops Have Surrounded Many Towns and Seized People.

STORY DENIED.

War Office Says People Are Gradually Leaving Towns Under Turks.

LONDON, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press). — An Exchange Telegraph despatch from Bagdad reports that the Turks have surrounded a number of Christian villages in Mosul territory and deported 8,000 persons, of whom 200 escaped into Irak. These refugees are described by the correspondent as "terribly destitute." He adds that they bring news of further massacres by the Turks.

The report that 8,000 persons had been deported was described by a War Office official as exaggerated. He said, however, that during the last twelve months, as many as 5,000 or 6,000 Christians had gradually left the villages in Mosul which were under Turkish rule and drifted into Irak, a few hundreds at a time.

TWO YEAR TERM FOR ASSAULTING MOTHER-IN-LAW

Inability to Find Job is Given as Reason For Robbery With Violence.

Severe Injuries Suffered By Woman, Including a Broken Rib.

TORONTO, Sept. 15 (Canadian Press)—For a brutal assault on his aged mother in law, William Worton was sentenced to two years in Portsmouth Penitentiary, then deportation to England. Worton pleaded that his inability to obtain employment was responsible for his robbing Mrs. Annie Fulton of $95 by violence. It was stated in court that Mrs. Fulton suffered a rib wrenched from the breast bone and fractured, injuries to the face and a violent injury to the neck. "Finally," Mrs. Fulton said "he left me, I firmly believe, for dead."

NEW HASTINGS-PETERBOROUGH RIDING IS IN CHAOTIC STATE WITH PARTIES DISORGANIZED

Clergymen Not To Ask About Groom's Health

OTTAWA, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press)—The Church of England Social Service Council, which met here yesterday, declined to concur in a recommendation to the effect that ministers should inquire from the prospective groom during the marriage ceremony as to his physical condition and as to his suffering from any contagious disease. The resolution that brought about this discussion was forwarded by the Toronto Social Hygiene Council.

Redistribution That Wiped Out East Peterborough, Broke Happy Families.

QUESTIONING MOOD.

Conservatives Ready, Progressives to Meet and Liberals Are Bewildered.

Strange bedfellows in strange beds!

That phrase suggests the feelings and, to some extent the actual condition of political partisans in the federal constituency of Hastings - Peterborough.

And they're not the trim twin beds of the theatrical boudoir farces and of the smart furnishings of the modern home so colorfully recommended in the magazine advertisements of the bed manufacturers.

No, they are the old four posters of vast areas in which parties of convivial men in the old days have awakned "on the morning after" wondering at the number and the identity of their equally confused companions.

In something of that bedazed and questioning mood Liberals and Conservatives and Progressives in the freshly made up political beds of the new riding to the east are groping around in the morning light after redistribution, wondering where they

MEN IN WATER OVER 28 HOURS

St. Catherines Men Were in Boat Which Capsized Sunday Afternoon.

CONDITION SERIOUS.

TORONTO, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press)—Thrown into the water when their twenty-foot skiff "Swallow" capsized in the lake on Sunday afternoon, Tom Madden and George Goffin, both of St. Catharines, were rescued by Superintendent Lang and his crew about 8.30 last night about eight miles west of Port Dalhousie, after they had been in the water for more than 28 hours. Both men were exhausted and incapable of movement. They were were taken aboard the surf boat and conveyed to Port Dalhousie, where they received medical attention. Their condition is said to be serious.

SCHEME TO USE FUNDY POWER IS PASSED IN MAINE

Voters Approve of Cooper Plan to Harness Huge Tides in Bay.

LARGE MAJORITY.

Dams Will Be Built to Bottle Up Water in Bays Along Coast.

PORTLAND, Maine, Sept. 15. — (Canadian Press). — A $100,000,000 project for harnessing the great tides of the Bay of Fundy so as to generate from 500,000 to 700,000 horse power and supply electricity to the eastern section of this country and Canada has been endorsed by the voters of Maine.

The plan, conceived by Dexter P. Cooper, would store up waters in Passamaquoddy Bay, release them through turbines in a 16 to 20-foot drop into Cobscook Bay and supply, it is estimated, 3,268,000,000 kilo watt hours a year, or four times the capacity of Muscle Shoals.

At a special election held yesterday the voters approved the proposal according to incomplete returns by a vote of 39,426 to 4,851.

Mr. Cooper would build a series of dams from the mainland of Maine to that of New Brunswick, thus making two basins of Passamaquoddy and Cobscook Bays, the former measuring 100 square miles and the latter 50 square miles. The dam gates to the larger basin would be kept open during the rising tides and those to the smaller during the falling tides. These tides range from 31 to 27 feet, and the accumulated waters would be sent through the power houses between the two dams.

PRAISES BOARD FOR GOOD WORK AT EXHIBITION

Hon. G. N. Gordon Recommends Fair to Support of People.

IS OUTSTANDING.

Assured of Success if Adequate Support is Given Work Done.

Hon. G. N. Gordon who said he has seen most of the Fairs in Ontario, this morning declared that this year's Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is outstanding surpassing all previous efforts and records. It is being built up every year, he said, and could only be possible through the co-operation of all the people of both city and county. All that is needed now is attendance, and if everyone will go at least once, take some other person with him, and invite visitors from out of town, then the Fair is assured of success.

Hon. Mr. Gordon paid a tribute to the directors and officers who, he said, had been most active in their efforts to make a success of the Exhibition They devoted time and labor without stint, and even money, he said, in a cause that netted them no personal gain except the satisfaction of boosting Peterborough county and city and improving the stock, grain and products of farm and factory.

Good Advertising

Remarking on the wonderful advertising power of the Exhibition, Mr. Gordon said it shows conclusively the variety, quality and completeness of the products of Peterborough mechanics and workers. The city takes second place to none in its ability to fabricate goods, and the Exhibition is an opportunity to learn of what is being done.

The stock exhibits, which form the basis of the Fall Fair, indicate the extent to which Peterborough county farmers are taking up the improvement of their breeding animals, thus increasing values without increased cost of preparing the stock for market. Grain, poultry, horses, and all other farm exhibits show a great advance over previous years, Mr. Gordon said, holding out ample proof of the advancement of the science of farming.

Ants Migrate In Vast Column, Astounding People

SARANAC LAKE, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—A vast column of flying ants recently passed down the Racquett River Valley region of the Adirondaks. The cloud of insects was estimated to be four miles long, and took an hour and a quarter to pass given points. Amazed residents at first believed the cloud was smoke from a forest fire. The ants flew in great sections, but the sections were never more than a few feet apart. After the passing of the column, the river surface was covered with the bodies of insects that had flown too low.

MEIGHENN DENIES KING'S CHARGES

Makes Statement at Montreal in Answer to Alexandria Speech.

SPOKE ON TRAIN.

DRUMMONDVILLE, Que., Sept. 15.—Absolute denial of the charges made by Premier Mackenzie King in his Alexandria speech that Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, was seeking to arouse race prejudice and feeling in the current election campaign was made by Mr. Meighen yesterday.

From the train which is bearing him to the Maritime Provinces, Mr. Meighen issued the following statement: "Never in my life have I uttered words which either in their meaning or their inference directly or remotely tended to set one race against another. This is the first time I have ever heard that charge made against myself. My every utterance has been toward the very opposite object."

BURNED BODIES ARE IDENTIFIED

Two Found in Car Were John and Catherine Grey, Resort Owners.

MOTIVE FOUND.

EAST ST LOUIS, Ills., Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—The charred bodies of a man and a woman found in a burned automobile near here on Sunday were tentatively identified yesterday as those of John Gray, part owner of Tagle Park, a notorious Madison County resort, and his wife Catherine.

The police said they had no doubt that the two had been slain. They found in the double killing of Hollis Bryam and Melvin Norvell at Eagle Park in November, 1924, a possible clue to a motive. A central figure in that killing was a woman Catherine Gray. The police were told that Norvell had threatened to "get" Bryam for his alleged association with Catherine Gray during her husband's absence.

LATEST WALLPAPERS ON VIEW AT FALL FAIR

Reg. N. Boxer Co., Ltd., of New Toronto, Has Exclusive Range of Latest Design.

Apart from their beauty, their newness of design should attract the sightseer's attention to this exhibit. For the first time in twelve years this firm, exclusively, has on view and ready for order, the 30-inch wall paper to which popular favor is now swinging so heavily. The Reg. N. Boxer Company, Ltd., is the only firm manufacturing paper in this width, and its sales have already shown that they once more correctly gauged public taste in advance.

Visitors are invited to inspect the samples on display at the booth. A salesman, with expert knowledge of the part wall paper plays in interior decorating, is on duty at the booth. To the firm's mind, his primary function there is to impart information upon the products to any who inquire. Sightseers are assured that they will have the benefit of this salesman's experience without placing themselves in any way under obligation to buy.

These papers will be handled in Peterborough by Trebilcock Bros., 417 George Street; Coleman Bros., 445 George Street; R. C. Braund, 53 Park Street.

ExhibitionNotes

Members of the Third Prince of Wales Dragoons are practicing assiduously for the musical ride which they will put on before the grand stand at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. This promises to be one of the biggest drawing cards in the whole programme and will be an interesting spectacle.

Come and enjoy yourself— and help make it 30,000 this year. Next year we want 35,000.

Even if you don't feel well, don't be afraid to have a good time. There's an emergency hospital on the grounds.

If you like animal acts, Tice has one that will make you sit up and take notice.

Monkeys that drive automobiles are something new. See for yourself at the east end of the midway.

Do you remember the putty and delph plate that used to hang on the wall back home? There's something new in this kind of work in the Main Building. It's a flower stand.

The hot dog tent is midway between the dog show tent and the gate, so if any dogs try to escape—good-night!

The ring necked pheasants that Mr. Bradburn obtained from the Provincial government are well worth seeing.

You can't see it all in one day.

Over $1,000.00 worth of strip advance tickets were sold during the past week for the Fair. The sale was over on Saturday and holders can use them either for general admission or grandstand admission.

To-morrow is Children's Day. A wonderful programme has been prepared which will entertain both young and old. One of the special features will be Francois, blindfolded, racing against time. To-morrow children are admitted for 5c., and grandstand free. Balance of the week, children 10c., grandstand 10c.

Hundreds visited the grounds last night and got a most pleasant surprise. The lighting effects this year, under the charge of Mr. Harry Beatty, on instructions from the commission, are finer than ever.

The Midway is the bigest that has been in this part of Ontario. Twenty car loads of amusement devices and games. They will be in operation to-night.

"BRINGING UP FATHER" — Geo. McManus

SIXTEEN OFFERS FOR TOWN BONDS ALL OVER PAR

Cochrane, Hay and Company of Toronto, Took Issue at 102.31.

NONE LESS THAN 101.

Debentures Were Issued To Pay For Sewer Work in Campbellford

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 15—Sixteen financial houses in Toronto tendered for the sewer debentures offered for sale by the Town Council, and everyone of these offered a premium. Campbellford's bonds are still regarded as excellent security. Some of the brokers who tendered sent in their offers by telegraph.

The bids were opened and considered at a special meeting of the Council last night, and the firm to whom the bonds will be sold is Cochrane, Hay and Company, of Toronto, whose bid was 102.31. No offer was for less than 101, and a small decimal fraction was all that separated the majority. The second highest tender, sent in by a well-known firm, was for 102.31.

The total debenture issue offered by the town is $55,600. Of this amount, $8,000 is to run for 10 and the balance for 15 years, the bonds bearing interest at the rate of 5½ per cent.

The last issue of bonds, to pay for the new High School, brought 106, but these were for a long term, and the interest was six per cent.

The motion to accept the tender of Cochran, Hay and Company was made by Councillor Kingston and seconded by Deputy-Reeve Palliser.

Want Right-of-Way.

Merchants and other property owners on the west side of Front, north of Bridge Street, sent in a petition asking that the alley north of the Queen's Hotel be made a public thoroughfare so that teams could be driven along the Canal in the rear of the buildings. This would be a benefit to the storekeepers, who could have goods delivered at their back doors and would also make it easier to remove the rubbish which accumulates along the rear.

The present owners of the Queen's Hotel building is Mrs. P. J. Kelly and her minor children, to whom the property was willed by Mrs. Kelly's brother, who died recently. The late owner had closed the alley to traffic by placing a bar across it, and this obstruction is still maintained.

Councillor Kingston and Town Solicitor Lynch were appointed a committee to confer with Mrs. Kelly and, if possible, make some amicable arrangement. This action was taken after several of the councillors had expressed the opinion that the matter was one which concerned the petitioners alone, and that they should settle it without aid from the Council. Councillors Stone and Abernethy made the motion referring the question to a committee.

Simpson Street Birdge

The building of a bridge across the creek at Simpson Street, a matter that has been before the Council for the past three years, was advanced a stage last night when it was decided to build the required piers—these to be of cement—the work to be done this fall. McKelvie and McCook, who own a saw mill near the proposed structure agree to lay a wooden bridge on the piers at their own expense as the improvement would be of special benefit to them in hauling their lumber to the depot.

Mayor Meyers estimated that the piers could be constructed for between three and four hundred dollars and said this expense could be met out of the money which the town is to receive from Contractor MacNabb who is building the new power house and who has rented the town's air compressor for $5 a day.

A motion by Reeve Davidson and Councillor Cole that the piers be built was put and resulted in a tie four voting for and four against the proposition. Mayor Meyers broke the tie by voting in the affirmative.

Working Double Shifts

It was reported that Contractor MacNabb who rented the town's compressor at $5 a day was keeping the machine at work night and day. Some of the Councillors contended that this was not in accord with the spirit of the agreement and that Mr. MacNabb should be charged a double price. Mayor Meyers and others took a more lenient view of the matter, saying that a rental of $5 a day for a machine that cost $1400 was all that could be reasonably demanded. No definite action was taken but Mr. MacNabb can carry on as usual.

Renting Road Roller

It is likely that the Township of Seymour will rent the road roller, scarifier and grader to repair the highway that runs from the town limits to the power house, part of the mileage that was recently taken from the list of county roads and returned to the township. The latter will pay $25 a day for the roller and all expenses of operating and the town will benefit by having this road put in shape.

All the councillors were present last night.

MADOC CHURCH KEPT FESTIVAL

Rev. Mr. Byers Delivered Harvest Sermon in Decorated Church.

SPECIAL MUSIC

MADOC, Sept. 15—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving services took place at the Church of St. John the Baptist on Sunday. The church was very tastefully decorated with grain, vegetables, fruit and flowers.

Rev. Mr. Byers of Stirling was the special speaker for the occasion. In the morning Mr. Byers spoke on Genesis VIII, 22, "Whiles the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." "Man has faith in these promises," the speaker said. "Man has never found a time when it has failed." There have been periods when dearth and famine came to certain parts of the earth, but other parts were able to make up for it and send food to the needy ones.

Mr. Byers spoke first about this material harvest, and particularly about this country, comparing it with other lands which have had trouble and turmoil, and have lacked the peace and plenty which has come to those who live under the Union Jack. Where is there a land so blessed as this? It is veritably a land flowing with milk and honey. Farmers now are reaping the results of the work of their forefathers who cleared the wilderness and carved out their little homes from the forests.

Comparison was made by the speaker between the primitive methods of the pioneers in gathering their harvest and the modern machinery of the farmer of today. Yet in spite of their hardship and difficulties the people of the old days worked and endured with a feeling of joy and happiness, and there was a union among the early settlers that is not experienced today. In those days a man would walk many miles to get a bushel of wheat ground at the old type of mill. Now the great grain fields of the west are looked upon by Europe as the granary of the world. Who is it that stands behind all these things? Who has granted all these to man? Surely it is the Creator. He it is who sends all things for the nourishment of men's bodies, and He it is who showed His love when He sent Jesus Christ to raise mankind and lift him up above mere material things.

When one looks around this church today he thinks of God's promise, "Seed time and harvest shall not fail," said Mr. Byers. Are people appreciative and thankful? It is said that one misses the water only when the well goes dry. If a famine came people would waken up. When famine occurred in other countries Christianity wakened up and made provision for suffering brethren. All things come of God. People can only show our appreciation of what God has given them. It is not theirs but His. They look forward to appearing on His presence. Their bodies return to dust, but the Soul returns to God who gave it.

In the evening Mr. Byers delivered an impressive and interesting address on the text taken from St. Matthew XXVIII, 20, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Amen."

Children's Day at Exhibition

Do you know why the Directors of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition plan to admit you for Five Cents to the biggest show between Toronto and Ottawa? And why you will be privileged to sit in the grand stand and see the big vaudeville performance free

It is because, when you grow up, you boys and girls will own the buildings and ground where the Exhibition is held. The men who are managing the Fair now are keeping things going until you grow up. Then it will be your turn to manage it and keep it growing.

These men who give their time, money and labor, to make the Fair a success every year wish to have you interested in it. They want you to have a good time to-morrow and then when you grow up you will want to give others a good time, and the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition will keep on growing and being of use to people in this district.

An Exhibition is not simply a place for entertainment, however. Here are shown the best that farmers can produce on their farms, and the best that factories can produce in their plants. Farmers are trying to get the best grain, the best cattle, the best horses, and the best poultry possible, so that their work may be successful and better paying. Manufacturers are always trying to improve the goods they make, in order to please people better and expand the sale of their products. Store-keepers wish to give the people who buy from them the very best goods they can get for the money they spend.

And all of these people display their goods at the Exhibition to show you what they can do. They are proud of what they show there, just as you boys and girls are proud of the exhibit you have in the school section.

And you, too, are proud of the work that is done in Peterborough factories and carried to the end of the earth; you are proud of the splendid success of the farmers in Peterborough district in developing good dairy cows, good horses, good poultry, and good grain. You are proud of Peterborough and of the Peterborough Exhibition.

It is yours to-morrow—Children's Day.

FRED W. BOWEN WAS CHOSEN A CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE FOR FEDERAL ELECTION IN DURHAM

Mayor Thomas Chalk, of Port Hope, Elected President at Association Convention.

MANY SPEAKERS.

Former M.P.'s Scored Government on Its Record and Policies.

ORONO, Ont., Sept. 15 (Canadian Press)—Fred W. Bowen, member of the last parliament was unanimously chosen as standard bearer for the Conservative party for the County of Durham in the present Federal election, at a convention here yesterday. No other name was mentioned for nomination.

Officers of the association elected were: Mayor Thomas B. Chalk, of Port Hope, president; Dr. Boneycastle, Bowmanville, first vice-president; Miss Mackintosh, 2nd vice president, and John Eakins, of Millbrook, third vice-president. The secretary is A. J. Vance, Millbrook, and the Treasurer is Reg. Hayden, Port Hope. Honorary presidents are Senator R. A. Mulholland, Jonas Thornton, ex-M.P. and General John Hughes of Bowmanville.

Mack C. Senn, late member for Haldimand county, was the first speaker. Mr. Senn scored the King Government on its record. He claimed that when Mr. King had taken office the problems of the war were practically over and it was comparatively easy sailing for the newcomers. Mr. King had promised many things but he had failed in every respect to fulfill every one of his promises. At the time Mr. King had taken power the country was showing signs of prosperity but today it was a different story. The national debt had been increasing at the rate of one million dollars a week. Mr. Senn held that tinkering with the tariff was entirel responsible for the condition of business in Canada and held that not until the Conservative party got into power would there be any change. The people had confidence in the Conservative party and on October 29th they would show it. Mr. Senn also paid high tribute to the words of Mr. Bowen and his work at Ottawa.

Donlad Sutherland, former M.P. for South Oxford, in opening his address said that this election was one of the most critical in the history of Canada. He held that there was only one proper system of Government and that was the two party system. While Western Canada was socially Progressive, those people were really Liberals. Mr. King had complained that he had not a majority, but he always had a majority with his Progressive Liberal allies. Mr. Sutherland then traced the history of the patrons of industry and showed that the man who had organized the party was the same Duncan Marshall who was in Government pay to-day. He told of how a vote of monies was carried through for payment of Mr. Marshall's service, and the part that Hon. G. N. Gordon had taken in getting it through. Mr. Gordon was chairman of the committee and Mr. Sutherland claimed that the chairman had told a deliberate falsehood when he had stated that the item in connection with Mr. Marshall was a vote in the civil estimates, when it was not. When the thing came out Mr. Gordon refused to go back on the vote, and later it was found out and challenged on the floor of the house that no commission had ever been issued to Mr. Marshall by which he could draw the money which had gone through the estimates for him.

"It was simply paying the Liberal organizer out of public money," said Mr. Sutherland, and such a contemptible piece of business had never been pulled off in Canada before or in any other country he ever knew of. He challenged Mr. King for bringing up the racial question and stated that he should be the last man to bring this up and accuse others of doing so.

There was absolutely no justification for it, and it was nothing but a camouflaged attempt to divert the attention of the people from the big questions which had to be faced at this election. He showed how the country was being depleted of her best people due entirely to the policy of Mr. King and the tariff, and he held that Mr. King had done nothing that should warrant his return to power.

"There is only one thing that we can give Mr. King credit for, and that is that he has solved the housing problem of Canada," said Mr. Sutherland.

Mr. Sutherland then dealt with the Great Lakes combine and showed the folly of such legislation and then dealt at some length with the Atlantic Ocean rates enquiry and told the audience that the only person that believed in it was W. R. Preston, who had been drawing a big salary. Even the Liberals themselves could not stand for some of the things that the King Government had done. Although Mr. King called the Liberals who refuse to have anything to do with him traitors, they should be complimented on their good sense of loyalty in coming to the rescue of their country. Dealing with the Australian treaty, Mr. Sutherland showed how it was found to hurt the farmers of Canada, and held that the only thing for Canada was a stable tariff.

When Mr. Bowen, the candidate, rose to speak, he was received with applause.

Mr. Bowen went into the questions of the day in a very full manner, particularly emphasizing the importance of a proper tariff for the farmer. He showed how foreign [illegible] Australian treaty would be in the farmers of Canada.

Other speakers were: T. Pells, M.P.A. for East Durham, and Senator John Hoskin.

SYNOPSIS.

Bob Wilson, the young tramp, convinces the grief-stricken Jim Fowler, who has tried to end his life, that his duty is to live and care for his baby son, whose birth caused the death of its mother. They are at Jim's home in Crater City and Fowler induces Bob to abandon his life as a vagabond and seek a job with the railroad there. Wilson, who had saved the Limited Mail, is a college graduate and mystery surrounds his voluntary adoption of a hobo's existence.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

"What could I have done if Providence hadn't sent you in my path? Killed myself, or gone to pieces—with not a living relative to do for me what you, a——," Jim broke down.

"A homeless bum!" prompted Bob dryly, throwing the penknife at a belligerent bumblebee.

To cover his embarrassment Jim reached down and wrestled Bob to his feet.

"I'm sorry," he said. "Bob, I'm going to be old womanish enough to advise you to do one of two things. The first is, that if you are breaking someone's heart by remaining away and it is just something that can be explained and forgiven, don't ruin your life and others. Remember the desolation you've seen that couldn't be helped in my little home."

Jim paused anxiously, his eyes watching for some sign of a break, some hint of an impression, in Bob's eyes. But he looked in vain; Bob stood monumentally—unblinking, unsmiling and unanswering. Jim continued slowly after a few moments.

"The second is, if you can't or don't care to do the first, that you settle down with me here in Crater City. You can bury yourself here as well as any place. This town is no more than a fungus knuckle on a great transcontinental railroad, with no prospects of a future any different than its barren and laborious past. No one ever comes here who doesn't have to. You'll be as isolated here as on a desert island, and a damn sight more comfortable than—hoboing!"

"It isn't the comfort I'm considering, nor the attractiveness of a tramp's life," said Bob, speaking quietly and very deliberately. "It's just the satisfaction of knowing that as a bum I would be, like every bum, a living red flag of protest against the topheavy humbuggery of civilized society. Russia on as a whole social gesture is a crystallized thumbing of the nose by the least hypocritical minority of mankind at the useless shams and cant of the smug majority."

"Then why can't a man of your attainments, who obviously combines breeding and intellect with a lack of hypocrisy, be individualistic in his expression of contempt for the whole social scheme," said Jim, his words tripping on one another's heels in his anxiety to put over the happy inspiration that he had seized upon. "Why can't you stay here and get a job on the railroad and demonstrate your own private contempt by helping to shuttle the 'smug majority' back and forth over the Mountain Division in their endless gaddings?"

Bob laughed at the boyish revelation of Jim's confidence that his eager enthusiasm would assure victory for his argument. And, still, Bob could think of no good reason for passing up Jim's proposal. It grew upon him sharply that he would be safer here in Crater City from chance contact with anyone he knew than he would be roaming around the country, even as a tramp. If the town's name of "Crater City" was geographically apt, then the social status of its citizens might be well described as "encratered." Bob chuckled with unholy glee; he would become an oiler or a switchman; something lowly, something "poor but honest." Oh, it was rich! If only they—if only she—could know.

Bob was roused from the daze of reflections into which he had drifted by a resounding crack on the shoulder from Jim, who misunderstood the exuastion but not the consequence of Bob's chuckling.

"You'll stay," he rejoiced.

"If I can find work—yes," promised Bob, grinning as he grasped and shook the hand that Jim thrust out.

"To-day—this afternoon—this very next fifteen minutes—is the best time to see about a job. We'll put aside the delight of mumbly-peg—we'll have to auyway, seeing that you lost your knife and hike right down to see Morran, the Yardmaster. He's a good friend of mine and he'll steer you into the right berth. Say, what job are we going to get for you, anyhow?"

Talking rapidly, footlichly, in his excited interest, Jim had already led Bob out to the front road and off in the direction of the wide-spread yards that made Crater City a veritable cobweb spun with steel threads; a chugging, heaving, smoking cobweb over and around and through which there fussed—by day in the sticky glare of an unshaded sun, and by night in the yellow glimmering of a thousand of its electric imitators—an overalled and begrimed host of human ants who, from time to time, scuttled out of the path of the Mallet locomotives that sped across the web like giant spiders.

"Will it be so easy for me to get a job that I can have a choice?" asked Bob as they swung downgrade on the gravelly hill road. Bob knew that despite his present grooming—so different from the stubble and dirt of him on that fateful night a month before!—and his neat, if rather confined, appearance in Jim's second best suit, he had become familiar to every child and householder and trainman in Crater City during his stay at Jim's cottage as "the hobo who saved the Limited." Therefore, he asked smilingly:

MISS MACPHAIL IS A CANDIDATE

TO TAKE INDEMNITY.

DURHAM, Sept. 15 (Canadian Press).—Miss Agnes MacPhail, Canada's first woman member of Parliament, was yesterday afternoon unanimously nominated by the United Farmers of Southeast Grey. No other name was mentioned. Costs of living at Ottawa are high, Miss McPhail intimated, in explaining her position on the indemnity question. Four years ago, she announced, that if elected, she would accept only $2,500 of the $4,000 paid to members. Yesterday she frankly stated that she had "been a complete fool" to make that promise. "I could have used it for many useful purposes."

If she goes back to Ottawa, she will accept the full indemnity; but at the same time she pledged herself to work for a reduction in the amount paid to all members.

Banking reform, not tariff or Senate reform, should be the issue in this election, she said.

SIXTEEN OFFERS FOR TOWN BONDS ALL OVER PAR

Cochrane, Hay and Company of Toronto, Took Issue at 102.31.

NONE LESS THAN 101.

Debentures Were Issued To Pay For Sewer Work in Campbellford

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 15—Sixteen financial houses in Toronto tendered for the sewer debentures offered for sale by the Town Council, and everyone of these offered a premium. Campbellford's bonds are still regarded as excellent security. Some of the brokers who tendered sent in their offers by telegraph.

The bids were opened and considered at a special meeting of the Council last night, and the firm to whom the bonds will be sold is Cochrane, Hay and Company, of Toronto, whose bid was 102.31. No offer was for less than 101, and a small decimal fraction was all that separated the majority. The second highest tender, sent in by a well-known firm, was for 102.31.

The total debenture issue offered by the town is $55,600. Of this amount, $8,000 is to run for 10 and the balance for 15 years, the bonds bearing interest at the rate of 5½ per cent.

The last issue of bonds, to pay for the new High School, brought 106, but these were for a long term, and the interest was six per cent.

The motion to accept the tender of Cochran, Hay and Company was made by Councillor Kingston and seconded by Deputy-Reeve Palliser.

Want Right-of-Way.

Merchants and other property owners on the west side of Front, north of Bridge Street, sent in a petition asking that the alley north of the Queen's Hotel be made a public thoroughfare so that teams could be driven along the Canal in the rear of the buildings. This would be a benefit to the storekeepers, who could have goods delivered at their back doors and would also make it easier to remove the rubbish which accumulates along the rear.

The present owners of the Queen's Hotel building is Mrs. P. J. Kelly and her minor children, to whom the property was willed by Mrs. Kelly's brothr, who died recently. The late owner had closed the alley to traffic by placing a bar across it, and this obstruction is still maintained.

Councillor Kingston and Town Solicitor Lynch were appointed a committee to confer with Mrs. Kelly and, if possible, make some amicable arrangement. This action was taken after several of the councillors had expressed the opinion that the matter was one which concerned the petitioners alone, and that they should settle it without aid from the Council. Councillors Stone and Abernethy made the motion referring the question to a committee.

Simpson Street Birdge

The building of a bridge across the creek at Simpson Street, a matter that has been bfore the Council for the past three yars, was advanced a stage last night when it was decided to build the required piers—these to be of cement—the work to be done this fall. McKelvie and McCook, who own a saw mill near the proposed structure agree to lay a wooden bridge on the piers at their own expense as the improvement would be of special benefit to them in hauling their lumber to the depot.

Mayor Meyers estimated that the piers could be constructed for between three and four hundred dollars and said this expense could be met out of the money which the town is to receive from Contractor MacNabb who is building the new power house and who has rented the town's air compressor for $5 a day.

A motion by Reeve Davidson and Councillor Cole that the piers be built was put and resulted in a tie four voting for and four against the proposition. Mayor Meyers broke the tie by voting in the affirmative.

Working Double Shifts

It was reported that Contractor MacNabb who rented the town's compressor at $5 a day was keeping the machine at work night and day. Some of the Councillors contended that this was not in accord with the spirit of the agreement and tha Mr. MacNabb should be charged a double price. Mayor Meyers and others took a more lenient view of the matter, saying that a rental of $5 a day for a machine that cost $1400 was all that could be reasonably demanded. No definite action was taken but Mr. MacNabb can carry on as usual.

Renting Road Roller

It is likely that the Township of Seymour will rent the road roller, scarifier and grader to repair the highway that runs from the town limits to the power house, part of the mileage that was recently taken from the list of county roads and returned to the township. The latter will pay $25 a day for the roller and all expenses of operating and the town will benefit by having this road put in shape.

All the councillors were present last night.

MADOC CHURCH KEPT FESTIVAL

Rev. Mr. Byers Delivered Harvest Sermon in Decorated Church.

SPECIAL MUSIC

MADOC, Sept. 15—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving services took place at the Church of St. John the Baptist on Sunday. The church was very tastefully decorated with grain, vegetables, fruit and flowers.

Rev. Mr. Byers of Stirling was the special speaker for the occasion. In the morning Mr. Byers spoke on Genesis VIII, 22, "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." "Man has faith in these promises," the speaker said. "Man has never found a time when it has failed. There have been periods when dearth and famine came to certain parts of the earth, but other parts were able to make up for it and send food to the needy ones.

Mr. Byers spoke first about this material harvest, and particularly about this country, comparing it with other lands which have had trouble and turmoil, and have lacked the peace and plenty which has come to those who live under the Union Jack. Where is there a land so blessed as this? It is veritably a land flowing with milk and honey. Farmers now are reaping the results of the work of their forefathers who cleared the wilderness and carved out their little homes from the forests.

Comparison was made by the speaker between the primitive methods of the pioneers in gathering their harvest and the modern machinery of the farmer of today. Yet in spite of their hardship and difficulties the people of the old days worked and endured with a feeling of joy and happiness, and there was a union among the early settlers that is not experienced today. In those days a man would walk many miles to get a bushel of wheat, ground at the old type of mill. Now the great grain fields of the west are looked upon by Europe as the granary of the world. Who is it that stands behind all these things? Who has granted all these to man? Surely it is the Creator. He it is who sends all things for the nourishment of man's bodies, and He it is who showed His love when He sent Jesus Christ to raise mankind and give them more above mere material things.

"When Jesus looks around this church today in thinks of God's promise, 'Seed time and harvest shall not fail,' said Mr. Byers. Are people appreciative and thankful? It is said that one misses the water only when the well goes dry. If a famine came people would waken up. When famine occurred in other countries Christianity wakened up and made provision for suffering millions. [illegible] Came of God, prospering [illegible] appreciation [illegible] given them. It is [illegible] His gifts, look forward [illegible] return to Him, but [illegible] God who gave."

In the evening Mr. Byers delivered an impressive and inspiring address on the text taken from St. Matthew XXIII, 37: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's."

Special music was rendered by the choir, the anthem in the morning being the harvest music "Praise Thy God, O Zion," and in the evening the "Hymn Triumphal." Mr. H. Bowerman sang in the evening, "Master, I will follow Thee."

Children's Day at Exhibition

Do you know why the Directors of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition plan to admit you for Five Cents to the biggest show between Toronto and Ottawa? And why you will be privileged to sit in the grand stand and see the big vaudeville performance free

It is because, when you grow up, you boys and girls will own the buildings and ground where the Exhibition is held. The men who are managing the Fair now are keeping things going until you grow up. Then it will be your turn to manage it and keep it growing.

These men who give their time, money and labor, to make the Fair a success every year wish to have you interested in it. They want you to have a good time to-morrow and then when you grow up you will want to give others a good time, and the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition will keep on growing and being of use to people in this district.

An Exhibition is not simply a place for entertainment, however. Here are shown the best that farmers can produce on their farms, and the best that factories can produce in their plants. Farmers are trying to get the best grain, the best cattle, the best horses, and the best poultry possible, so that their work may be successful and better paying. Manufacturers are always trying to improve the goods they make, in order to please people better and expand the sale of their products. Store-keepers wish to give the people who buy from them the very best goods they can get for the money they spend.

And all of these people display their goods at the Exhibition to show you what they can do. They are proud of what they show there, just as you boys and girls are proud of the exhibit you have in the school section.

And you, too, are proud of the work that is done in Peterborough factories and carried to the end of the earth; you are proud of the splendid success of the farmers in Peterborough district in developing good dairy cows, good horses, good poultry, and good grain. You are proud of Peterborough and of the Peterborough Exhibition.

It is yours to-morrow—Children's Day.

FRED W. BOWEN WAS CHOSEN A CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE FOR FEDERAL ELECTION IN DURHAM

Mayor Thomas Chalk, of Port Hope, Elected President at Association Convention.

MANY SPEAKERS.

Former M.P.'s Scored Government on its Record and Policies.

ORONO, Ont., Sept. 15 (Canadian Press)—Fred W. Bowen, member of the last parliament was unanimously chosen as standard bearer for the Conservative party for the County of Durham in the present Federal election, at a convention here yesterday. No other name was mentioned for nomination.

Officers of the association elected were: Mayor Thomas B. Chalk, of Port Hope, president; Dr. Bonnycastle, Bowmanville, first vice-president; Miss Mackintosh, and vice president, and John Eakins, of Millbrook, third vice-president. The secretary is A. J. Vance, Millbrook, and the Treasurer is Reg. Hayden, Port Hope. Honorary presidents are Senator R. A. Mulholland, Jonas Thornton, ex-M.P. and General John Hughes of Bowmanville.

Mark C. Senn, late member for Haldimand county, was the first speaker. Mr. Senn scored the King Government on its record. He claimed that when Mr. King had taken office the problems of the war were practically over and it was comparatively easy sailing for the newcomers. Mr. King had promised many things but he had failed in every respect to fulfill every one of his promises. At the time Mr. King had taken power the country was showing signs of prosperity but today it was a different story. The national debt had been increasing at the rate of one million dollars a week. Mr. Senn held that tinkering with the tariff was entirel responsible for the condition of business in Canada and held that not until the Conservative party got into power would there be any change. The people had confidence in the Conservative party and on October 29th they would show it. Mr. Senn also paid high tribute to the worth of Mr. Bowen and his work at Ottawa.

Donald Sutherland, former M.P. for South Oxford, in opening his address said that this election was one of the most critical in the history of Canada. He held that there was only one proper system of Government and that was the two party system. While Western Canada was socially Progressive, those people were really Liberals. Mr. King had complained that he had not a majority, but he always had a majority with his Progressive Liberal allies. Mr. Sutherland then traced the history of the patrons of industry and showed that the man who had organized the party was the same Duncan Marshall who was in Government pay to-day. He told of how a vote of monies was carried through for payment of Mr. Marshall's service, and the part that Hon. G. N. Gordon had taken in getting it through. Mr. Gordon was chairman of the committee and Mr. Sutherland claimed that the chairman had told a deliberate falsehood when he had stated that the item in connection with Mr. Marshall was a vote in the civil estimates, when it was not. When the thing came out Mr. Gordon refused to go back on the vote, and later it was found out and challenged on the floor of the house that no commission had ever been issued to Mr. Marshall by which he could draw the money which had gone through the estimates for him.

"It was simply playing the Liberal organizer out of public money," said Mr. Sutherland, and such a contemptible piece of business had never been pulled off in Canada before or in any other country he ever knew of. He challenged Mr. King for bringing up the racial question and stated that he should be the last man to bring this up and accuse others of doing so.

There was absolutely no justification for it, and it was nothing but a camouflaged attempt to divert the attention of the people from the big questions which had to be faced at this election. He showed how the country was being depleted of her best people due entirely to the policy of Mr. King and the tariff, and he held that Mr. King had done nothing that should warrant his return to power.

"There is only one thing that we can give Mr. King credit for, and that is that he has solved the housing problem of Canada," said Mr. Sutherland.

Mr. Sutherland then dealt with the Great Lakes combine and showed the folly of such legislation and then dealt at some length with the Atlantic Ocean rates enquiry and told the audience that the only person that believed in it was W. R. Preston, who had been drawing a big salary. Even the Liberals themselves could not stand for some of the things that the King Government had done. Although Mr. King called the Liberals who refuse to have anything to do with him traitors, they should be complimented on their good sense of loyalty in coming to the rescue of their country. Dealing with the Australian treaty, Mr. Sutherland showed how it was found to hurt the farmers of Canada, and held that the only thing for Canada was a stable tariff.

When Mr. Bowen, the candidate, rose to speak, he was received with applause.

Mr. Bowen went into the questions of the day in a very full manner, particularly emphasizing the importance of a proper tariff for the farmer. He showed how iniquitous the Australian treaty would be to the farmers of Canada.

Other speakers were A. I. Fallis, M.L.A. for East Durham, and General John Hughes.

SYNOPSIS.

Bob Wilson, the young tramp, convinces the grief-stricken Jim Fowler, who has tried to end his life, that his duty is to live and care for his baby son, whose birth caused the death of its mother. They are at Jim's home in Crater City and Fowler induces Bob to abandon his life as a vagabond and seek a job with the railroad there. Wilson, who had saved the Limited Mail, is a college graduate and mystery surrounds his voluntary adoption of a hobo's existence.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

"What could I have done if Providence hadn't sent you in my path? Killed myself, or gone to pieces—with not a living relative to do for me what you, a——" Jim broke down.

"A homeless bum!" prompted Bob dryly, throwing the penknife at a belligerent bumblebee.

To cover his embarrassment Jim reached down and wrestled Bob to his feet.

"I'm sorry," he said. "Bob, I'm going to be old womanish enough to advise you to do one of two things. The first is, that if you are breaking someone's heart by remaining away and it is just something that can be explained and forgiven, don't ruin your life and others. Remember the desolation you've seen that couldn't be helped in my little home."

Jim paused anxiously, his eyes watching for some sign of a break, some hint of an impression in Bob's eyes. But he looked in vain; Bob stood monumentally—unblinking, unsmiling and unanswering. Jim continued slowly after a few moments:

"The second is, if you can't or don't care to do the first, that you settle down with me here in Crater City. You can bury yourself here as well as any place. This town is no more than a fungus knuckle on a great transcontinental railroad, with no prospects of a future any different than its barren and laborious past. No one ever comes here who doesn't have to. You'll be as isolated here as on a desert island, and a damn sight more comfortable than—hoboing!"

"It isn't the comfort I'm considering, nor the attractiveness of a tramp's life," said Bob, speaking quietly and very deliberately. "It's just the satisfaction of knowing that as a bum I would be, like every bum, a living red flag of protest against the topheavy humbuggery of civilized society. Humanity as a whole social gesture is a crystallized thumbing of the nose by the least hypocritical minority of mankind at the useless shams and cant of the smug majority."

"Then why can't a man of your attainments, who obviously combines breeding and intellect with a lack of hypocrisy, be individualistic in his expression of contempt for the whole social scheme," said Jim, his words tripping on one another's heels in his anxiety to put over the happy inspiration that he had seized upon. "Why can't you stay here and get a job on the railroad and demonstrate your own private contempt by helping to shuttle the 'smug majority' back and forth over the Mountain Division in their endless gaddings?"

Bob laughed at the boyish revelation of Jim's confidence that his eager enthusiasm would assure victory for his argument. And, still, Bob could think of no good reason for passing up Jim's proposal. It grew upon him sharply that he would be safer here in Crater City from chance contact with anyone he knew than he would be roaming around the country, even as a tramp. If the town's name of "Crater City" was geographically apt, then the social status of its citizens might be well described as "encratered." Bob chuckled with unholy glee; he would become an oiler or a switchman; something lowly, something "poor but honest." Oh, it was rich! If only they—if only she—could know.

Bob was roused from the daze of reflections into which he had drifted by a resounding crack on the shoulder from Jim, who misunderstood the causation but not the consequence of Bob's chuckling.

"You'll stay," he rejoiced.

"If I can find work—yes," promised Bob, grinning as he grasped and shook the hand that Jim thrust out.

"To-day—this afternoon—this very next fifteen minutes—is the best time to see about a job. We'll put aside the delight of mumbly-peg—we'll have to anyway, seeing that you lost your knife and hike right down to see Morran, the Yardmaster. He's a good friend of mine and he'll steer you into the right berth. Say, what job are we going to get for you, anyhow?"

Talking rapidly, footishly, in his excited interest, Jim had already led Bob out to the front road and off in the direction of the wide-spread yards that made Crater City a veritable cobweb spun with steel threads; a chugging, heaving, smoking cobweb over and around and through which there fussed—by day in the sticky glare of an unshaded sun, and by night in the yellow glimmering of a thousand of its electric imitators—an overalled and begrimed host of human ants who, from time to time, scuttled out of the path of the Mallet locomotives that sped across the web like giant spiders.

"Will it be so easy for me to get a job that I can have a choice?" asked Bob as they swung downgrade on the gravelly hill road. Bob knew that despite his present grooming—so different from the stubble and dirt of him on that fateful night a month before!—and his neat, if rather confined, appearance in Jim's second best suit, he had become familiar to every child and householder and trainman in Crater City during his stay at Jim's cottage as "the hobo who saved the Limited." Therefore, he asked smilingly:

MISS MACPHAIL IS A CANDIDATE

TO TAKE INDEMNITY.

DURHAM, Sept. 15 (Canadian Press).—Miss Agnes MacPhail, Canada's first woman member of Parliament, was yesterday afternoon unanimously nominated by the United Farmers of Southeast Grey. No other name was mentioned. Costs of living at Ottawa are high, Miss MacPhail intimated, in explaining her position on the indemnity question. Four years ago, she announced, that if elected, she would accept only $2,500 of the $4,000 paid to members. Yesterday she frankly stated that she had "been a complete fool" to make that promise. "I could have used it for many useful purposes."

If she goes back to Ottawa, she will accept the full indemnity; but at the same time she pledged herself to work for a reduction in the amount paid to all members.

Banking reform, not tariff or Senate reform, should be the issue in this election, she said.

OBITUARY.

W. H. RUTHERFORD

Mr. William Henry Rutherford passed away last evening at his home, Lot 17, Con. 11, Otonabee, after a week's illness, aged 59 years. He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowing wife, two children, Harry and Mary, and an adopted daughter, Jessie; two sisters, Mrs. Walter Dickson of Toronto, and Mrs. Ernie Shore of Ottawa.

The funeral will be from his residence at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, September 16.

MRS. J. W. DOWN.

The death of Mrs. J. W. Down, wife of the Rev. J. Wesley Down, of Tyrone (formerly of Omemee), occurred last week at the Tyrone Parsonage. Following an operation a year ago, she had been a constant sufferer, and bedfast for three months.

During her residence in Omemee, Mrs. Down endeared herself to many, and she was ever ready to spread sunshine in the home darkened by sickness or grief.

The funeral service was held on Friday afternoon at the Tyrone United Church, and was very largely attended.

Left to mourn the loss of a loving helpmate, mother and sister, are the grief-stricken husband and three daughters, Mrs. (Rev.) Andrew MacLaughlin of Keene; Mrs. H. Holland of Enterprise, and Florence at home; two sons, Arthur of Ottawa, and Theodore at home; also two sisters and one brother to whom is extended the sympathy of many old Omemee friends.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 15, 1925.

HON. C. V. MASSEY.

The first surprise of the political campaign has been furnished by Premier King in the appointment as a Minister without Portfolio of Mr. Charles Vincent Massey, President of the Massey-Harris Company.

While Mr. Massey's selection doubtless was for window-dressing purposes and his acceptance of a position in the Cabinet furnishes the Government with a potent argument in favour of its position on the tariff, yet he must be regarded as a valuable acquisition on his own account in view of his business training and his record of achievement.

Politically the appointment will be looked on as a shrewd stroke.

The presence in the Cabinet of the chief executive of one of Ontario's largest industries is an answer to the charge that the Government's policy is destroying Canadian industry, and viewed from this angle the selection of Mr. Massey will be of great service to the Government speakers during the balance of the campaign.

That Mr. Massey was chosen mainly for that reason does not destroy the value of his Cabinet appointment as a campaign demonstration of much effectiveness.

MAKE IT A GALA WEEK.

With the Peterboro Exhibition continuing for five days, this should be Peterboro's gala week.

Other cities have had their old home weeks and celebrations of some kind or other this summer.

Peterboro can make up for the absence of such celebrations this week.

In this connection the Examiner suggests to its friends in the business section that the occasion be recognized by having the business streets put on gala attire.

Let us get the flags out everywhere, use the Exhibition in some way or another in the window-dressing for this week, let our hundreds of visitors know that the people of Peterboro are solidly behind the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition.

In western parlance, "this is our week to howl," so let us howl loud enough to convince our Exhibition visitors that this is a live community, made up of real citizens who are proud of their annual fair and want the whole world to know it.

Nothing puts everybody in a holiday mood quicker than to see streets alive with flags and bunting.

Let the business section testify to the popularity of the Exhibition.

THE BATHING BEACHES.

Supervision has been withdrawn by the City Council from the bathing beaches at Inverlea Park and Lake street, and the dressing-rooms are closed for the year.

It is hoped that before another bathing season rolls around that the whole question of bathing beaches will receive attention from the authorities.

In the first place, the people should be given a chance to say by their ballots at the municipal elections whether or not they favour Sunday bathing.

Then the charge made by Dr. McPherson that the water at both beaches is polluted by sewage should be investigated and acted upon.

And finally, a number of improvements are necessary.

The accommodation so far as dressing-rooms are concerned can fittingly be described as primitive.

It is certainly not sanitary, and the impression upon visitors is far from what is desirable.

Peterboro should have ample facilities for bathing, better protection, cleaner water, and more commodious dressing-rooms, and these things should be considered early in the new year, not left until the first hot wave brings them to the fore.

CHANGED CONDITIONS.

With the following editorial notes in the Globe, thousands of Canadians will find themselves in hearty agreement:

"After all what Mr. King thinks about Mr. Meighen and what Mr. Meighen thinks about Mr. King are of much less importance to Canada than both these gentlemen seem to imagine."

"If the two political leaders continue to charge fraud and misrepresentation, what is the poor voter to do in making his choice? Public life should have advanced beyond the personal abuse stage."

The Examiner feels that these views will be generally shared, and that already there is a strong undercurrent of disappointment in the utterances of the party leaders.

Political conditions in Canada have changed.

Party allegiance, of course, exists, but it no longer holds the entire population in its grip.

Throughout the country there are thousands of electors who realize the critical nature of the problems with which Canada is confronted, and who, seeking to find the best way out, are following the speeches of the various parties in the hope of being able to make a wise choice when October 29th arrives.

The old party war cries mean little or nothing to such electors; they are weary of the game of "ins" and "outs," to quote a war phrase, they are "fed up" with politics.

They want the bread of concrete, definite clean-cut policies, not the stone of personal abuse and partisan vilification.

Generalities will no longer satisfy a large proportion of the electorate.

They know that Canada's railway problem must be solved, that where other countries are reducing taxation our people are still carrying an almost overwhelming burden, that too many of our younger Canadians have left Canada.

And knowing these things, they are conscientiously trying to determine how they can use their franchise next month in the best interest of Canada.

They are not receiving much help from the politicians in arriving at a decision.

WAGES OF MANAGEMENT.

"Give me a junk pile and a genius to run it," said an experienced Wall Street man the other day, "and I will buy stock in it with confidence. Give me the best established industrial corporation in the United States, with a book value of twice its selling price but with well-meaning nonentities to run it and I will sell it short for investment with absolute assurance."

Every word of that is true.

There is a theoretical permanence about a railroad proposition, safeguarded by maximum rates, which can operate for a time on second-rate management.

But the railroad will drift into receivership sooner or later.

It is only a question of time and the chapter of accidents.

Given an industrial company whose active head does not know the business, however expert he may be in some other business, and the stockholder can kiss his dividends goodbye.

That is what management means.

The socialist pretense that it should be the servant of the labor employer, receiving only a little more reward with no certainty of tenure or real authority, ignores all this.

The genius who builds up the United States Steel Corporation is not worth fifty thousand or a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollars a year.

He is worth all he chooses to ask, and he is the cheapest thing the corporation buys.

Put in a new man who is the son of his father, whose father has influence with the creditors and can nominate the head of a corporation which has been living on its reputation for a few years.

Assume that he is an attractive, well-dressed, well-mannered fool.

Give him any corporation, any bank, in the United States or elsewhere, and he will make competitors faster than he will make customers.

Put him at the head of a National Bank with a free hand and he will be borrowing money at the pawnbroker's in five years.

You cannot equalize labor.

The shirker and the skilled artisan will always be unthinkable spiritual years apart.

How can you equalize labor at its best with competent management?

Indeed, labor should vote "capital" of that kind the highest possible wages, for its own employment depends upon the service competent management performs.—Barron's.

UP TO INSURANCE COMPANIES.

When the statement can be made that forty cents out of every dollar that the public pays for such a universal modern necessity as fire insurance is for the cost of doing business as against sixty cents for actual protection, it would certainly seem that, in the interests of all concerned, including the policyholders and the companies, it was time that something was done about it, says the Financial Post. That is the way the situation evidently appeals to Ontario's superintendent of insurance, R. Leighton Foster, and in his address before the convention of insurance superintendents at Winnipeg last week, he intimated that Government regulation of insurance rates was imminent. In regard to casualty insurance, and the automobile business in particular, he described a situation which is even worse, for his investigations indicate that competition is the only real factor in the establishment of rates, it requires little study of the situation to bring conviction that insurance cannot be provided on a sound basis while such conditions prevail.

The Financial Post believes that the situation is one demanding action. And it would be much better to have the desired changes brought about by the companies themselves rather than by the Government. Government regulation has its place; it is frequently justified in the public interest; but any study of the naturally complex system of insurance ratings leads to the conclusion that in the interests of all concerned they would be much better left in the hands of experts with the Governments exercising nothing more than general supervision and co-ordination at most.

The point is made by Mr. Foster, and evidently with some justification, that the insurance companies are largely responsible for the present situation. Undoubtedly they realize that the high ratio of costs, largely the result of increasing commissions to agents, is having the effect of putting an undue and unjustified burden on the shoulders of their policyholders. But in their keenness to get business and stand in with the agents they have allowed competition to prevent them in showing a united front in approaching the issue. Let it be said here, parenthetically, that there are many agents who are providing their clients with a real service, and fully earning their commissions, but there are also too many who, after placing a policy, consider that they are entitled to recurring commissions without doing anything further to earn them. On the whole the costs of getting the business are undoubtedly high, and these have a direct effect in boosting rates.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Let us make it 30,000 in 1925.

Get the habit tonight and keep it up all week—visit the Exhibition.

A Duluth speaker, after telling how to cure hay-fever, spoiled the effect by sneezing. And yet a lot of bald-headed barbers succeed in selling hair restorers.

Young Peterboro will have its innings at the Exhibition tomorrow, and the Examiner wishes the youngsters a happy day crammed full of interest.

Even the Canadian National Exhibition could not triumph over bad weather. But the total attendance under the handicap showed how great a hold the great annual fair has upon the affection of Canadians.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Sept. 14—The export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market today was very quiet, the demand from foreign buyers being of a very limited character and only for small lots for nearby shipment. A cable received from London stated that sales of Canadian Western No. 2 feed oats were made at 2/3 3d per quarter for first half October shipment. The demand for cash grain on the domestic market was also slow, and prices were about steady.

Theer were no further developments in the spring wheat flour situation, but the undertone to the market was easy at the recent decline noted owing to the further weakness in the cash wheat market. There was some business transacted for export account and the local and country demand showed a little improvement.

An easier feeling prevailed in winter wheat grades and a reduction in prices is expected in the near future. A moderate amount of business was transacted.

There was no important change in the condition of the market, for millfeed, prices being fully maintained under a continued good demand. There was some demand from foreign buyers for oatmeal and sales of oddlots were made for shipment. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was quiet but steady.

The feature of the local egg trade was the stronger feeling that developed and prices scored an advance of one to three cents per dozen.

Prices for all grades of butter were advanced 1-4 cent per pound. In a wholesale jobbing way the market was also stronger and prices were marked up one cent per pound. The cheese market was quiet and firm.

Beans were quoted on the market today at $2.50 per bushel.

FROM MR. MELTON.

The Editor,
Peterborough Examiner,
Dear Sir:

With your kind permission I would like to utilize the medium of your columns as a means by which it will be possible to address a few remarks to the returned soldier and the industrial workers in this Riding, regarding the coming Federal Election.

I would ask every returned soldier whether he be "lance jack" or "private," colonel or corporal, to give this election deep and careful consideration. As any one will quite easily recall in those sombre days from '14 to '18, due to the exigencies of wartime, we were obliged to swallow bitter pills. Not I am not alluding to No. 9s or any of their evil companions—privation and hardships were to be found on every side but the soldiers' code, although privileged to grumble, was to accept the situation in as light-hearted a manner as possible and say that he would have it out on "Heinie" which many of them did. Aside, however, from all this forced mirth and sometimes sham happiness were the remembrances of home and the wonderful times you would have at that "home-coming". How eagerly you would rush from that train to greet your loved ones. Why! had you not been away for some four years or more during which time your family had sorely missed you from the home circle or from your place as the breadwinner, at the head of the table. Yes! You were home now and your loved ones would again feel and learn to appreciate the sheltering influence of your frame within it's portals. Yes! in 1914 the Conservative Premier—still fresh from his campaign in 1911—when that Reciprocity issue was "down and outed"—in his memorable speech at the outbreak of the war told the Mother Country that in her hour of trial she could count on Canada and her many sons and daughters who still could show strong traces of that thick red British blood coursing through their veins to help her to the last man. What of Sir Robert's promise? Did he not see that Parliament upheld him and did not the people also with the exception of those who decided to cross the border to work on foundations, some "rocky" and many otherwise, just to save their skins as they inwardly expressed it. But what did Sir Robert Borden say to those men who were leaving in answer to Kitchener's call The gist of his words was that he pledged himself and his government to care for your loved ones in your absence and that when you returned he would see that you were rehabilitated.

Those words of promise were not like the words of promise expressed by some politicians today, they were pledges, they were honorable covenants of a man of just sufficient Scottish extraction in him to show that it burned like a deep red fire and that his word once given could be accepted as a pledge never to be broken. His government assumed those great burdens cheerfully and towards the close of the conflict Sir Robert showed such marked traces of physical collapse as the result of the wartime burden he had assumed that he was compelled to leave the political arena. His work was taken over by Mr. Arthur Meighen who found himself at the head of a Coalition Government formed of both the Liberal and the Conservative Parties whose sole aim was to bring Canada's share in the war to a successful conclusion. Then came the election, the result is still fresh in the memory of all. Mr. Meighen fighting again on the tariff and sensing with the foresight of a clear-headed, broad-minded statesman that Canada's fiscal policy depended entirely on her ability to rehabilitate or re-employ industrially or otherwise her many sons who had now returned from the battle wrecked plains of Europe.

The Liberal policy was less committal, it savoured of the "wait and see" specie, although Mr. Fielding, one of its most outstanding exponents, expressed himself on many occasions as strongly in favour of tariff stability. A Liberal Government was "returned"—the one that had just left office—with practically no majority at all but as the result of connivance with the Agrarian Group from the west, they were virtually assured of a continuance of office so long as they did as the Western farmers dictated, particularly with regard to tariff reductions thus jeopardizing Canada's industries. These tariff reductions were effected year by year and each time the Opposition, Mr. Meighen and followers, bravely fought against it to the last ditch, pointing out where such a policy would inevitably lead the country, but the government was adamant, in fact many journals of various creeds and parties suggested that it was composed mainly of office seekers fraught with but the sole desire of retaining office because of the remuneration attached thereto. Be that as it may one thing is now certain, that Mr. King and the Progressive Leader, Mr. Forke, are not quite so amiably disposed towards one another and since the Government has taken unto itself full credit for the little benefits which may have arisen during its administration but of course not the big troubles and distressing times they now go to the country claiming full credit for the bountiful harvest in the West. Mr. King realizes that he has got to win the West over again appreciating that he has a very forlorn hope in Ontario.

Why cannot he count on Ontario? The question is not difficult and any commercial traveller unbiased in views will tell you, because of the manner in which his Government has strangled organized industry in this Province by permitting unchecked the wholesale importation into this country of foreign made fully manufactured goods. I say foreign made because many of them come from our late enemies. Note the German photographic films being offered for sale right in this city today. Now let us go back to Sir Robert Borden's promise to rehabilitate the soldier when he returned.

Unfortunately, through no fault of his own he was deprived of office and it was no longer possible for

A THOUGHT.

HE WAS OVERCAPITALIZED.

A man who styles himself as "Butsy" tramped a thousand miles or more, and then decided that "Man's inhumanity to man" has not changed since the trip from Jerusalem to Jericho.

He says that on his tramp-trip he was held up nine times, offered six drinks of whisky to one cup of coffee, and that, while posing as an injured man by the side of the road, only one auto out of several hundred stopped to make inquiry of his hurts.

He was looking for something and he found it.

I, I will make bold to say that any man with a right mental attitude can walk from Portland to Portland and all along the way find friendship and hospitality, if he is looking for it.

This man concludes his criticisms on human nature with this comment: "I met four hundred and thirty seven workingmen who told me they were on the road because they could not find work.

"Butsy" can encounter plenty of men right here at home who cannot "find" work simply because they are not looking for work.

"Butsy" claims he started out with only one penny in his pocket and without doubt the public accepted him as overcapitalized.

STRYCHNINE KILLS MOTHER AND SON

Took Contents of a 2 Dram Vial Which Husband Had Purchased.

OWEN SOUND, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—Mrs. Stanley Foster, of Mount Horeb, Keppell Township, and her six-year-old son, David Lloyd, died yesterday as a result of strychnine poisoning. It is believed that the mother, who had been in poor health, and was suffering from severe pains in the head, became insane, and after administering the poison to her child, took the remainder of a 2-dram vial herself. The husband had purchased the drug sometime ago to use in poisoning cats, and the vial, emptied, was found in the kitchen where the tragedy occurred.

Mr. Foster was plowing in the fields yesterday forenoon when his wife came out with his glasses. She told her husband that she was getting their young lad ready to go to school. A short time later the nose of the plow broke, and Mr. Foster therefore had occasion to go to the house. He found the child writhing on the floor in great distress and his wife motionless on the bed.

Dr. Campbell of Hepworth and Dr. Froge, of Wiarton, were called, but the physicians found the unfortunate woman beyond help, but for a time had hopes of saving the boy's life. They were, however, unsuccessful, and the lad died about an hour afterwards. Dr. Rutherford, coroner, and Crown Attorney T. H. Dyre, who investigated the case, decided that there was no necessity for an inquest.

CANADIAN CLUBS HOLDING ANNUAL JOINT MEETING

Mayors of Port Arthur and Fort William Extend Welcome to Cities.

APPEAL FOR UNITY.

All Reports Indicate Lack of Speakers—Get Consideration.

FORT WILLIAM, September 15. —Canadian Press. — The thirteenth annual conference of the association of Canadian Clubs opened in Fort William yesterday with 125 delegates registered. The morning's business was taken up principally with the addresses of welcome by the Mayors of Port Arthur and Fort William and the response of Col. C. R. McCullough, Hon. President, and one of the founders of the Canadian cluubs.

In his address before the convention, the Colonel made a strong appeal for closer unity, intelligent service and greater idealism in the work for Canada and her people.

"Service and sacrifice are the elements that build up a great country," the Colonel said. "They are the germs of surety for the development of Canada. What can I give? should be the temper of the true Canadianism."

The committees on organization, resolutions, meeting place and nominations were completed at the noon hour and were instructed to bring in their reports as early as possible. The reports of the various provinces were received together with the report of the national executive, the president, C. H. Philpot and treasurer, J. L. Matthews, Port Arthur.

Practically every report from the provinces touched on the lack of speakers, and this matter is to receive the attention of the committees on re-organization. C. G. Cowan, of Ottawa, handed a resolution to the committee suggesting that complimentary affiliation be granted to clubs outside of Canada without the payment of fees.

A telegram was received from W. Sanford Evans, an honorary president of the association, expressing his regrets at being unable to attend.

Yesterday afternoon the convention listened to an address by Dr. E. L. Tarr, LL.D., of Winnipeg, on "The Canadian Clubs and its Tasks." The delegates will attend a banquet at the Shunian Club in Port Arthur this evening.

LEAGUE DEBATES ADMINISTRATION OF WORLD COURT

Proposal of Uruguayan Delegate Subject of Discussion.

LESS RIGID STATUTES.

Critics Say Undesirable to Chang Because of Misunderstandings.

GENEVA, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press.)—Discussing a resolution introduced in the League of Nations Assembly yesterday by J. A. Buero, former Foreign Minister of Uruguay, calling for serious study of the statutes of the Permanent Court of International Justice with a view to securing more universal acceptance of the jurisdiction of that tribunal, spokesmen for the Uruguayan delegation last night said that the object of the proposal is to render the statutes less rigid so that countries like the United States could join the court without making reservations.

These spokesmen said that the examination suggested by Uruguay would include all phases of the question of the world court, including the manner of electing judges by the Assembly and council of the League, concurrently. The Uruguayans repudiate any intention, however, of weakening the court's prerogatives.

Senor Buero's proposal has excited great interest and drawn some criticism on the ground that it is undesirable to attempt to change the status of the world court at a time when adhesion of the United States is a live issue and that such an attempt might create misunderstandings. Some of the delegates have pointed out that there is no objection to the United States making reservations in regard to her relations to the court, but predicted that any effort to amend the statutes which affect the relations of other countries to the tribunal would be opposed.

Indications that the League of Nations may hesitate to make any change with regard to the court developed in the juridical commission of the assembly this afternoon, when both the Japanese delegate, Mineichiro Adachi, and former President Motta, of Switzerland, opposed a Danish project to create an international commission of conciliation as a branch of the world court. They argued that the court, as a body of judges rigorously interpreting international law, should remain divorced from any such commission, which naturally would take political considerations into account while endeavoring to achieve conciliation between nations. Mr. Adachi favored the linking of conciliation with arbitration and making the proposed commission an independent body.

During a discussion to-day of Viscount Cecil's proposed anti-slavery protocol, the chairman announced the receipt of a communication from the Nationalist African Association denying recent charges that slavery under the guise of forced labor exists in Portuguese East Africa.

FORD DESIGNS RIGID DIRIGIBLE

Metal Bag as Gas Container Thought to be Better Than Composition.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 — A suggestion by Henry Ford that the Navy Department build and experiment with a rigid dirigible designed by his engineers is bing given serious consideration by Secretary of the Navy Wilbur.

Mr. Wilbur has asked the bureau of aeronautics to examine the plans of the airship, which were submitted by Mr. Ford's engineers.

It is proposed that the ship be 150 feet long, 50 feet in diameter and have a metal gas bag. The cost of one dirigible was placed at approximately $300,000.

The metal bag, the engineers said, would greatly reduce the tendency of the gas content to diffuse, as compared with the composition covering on the Shenandoah and would permit the ship to reach a 10,000 foot elevation without valving.

The dirigible would have a speed of 70 miles an hour, and a cruising radius of 2,000 miles.

COMMUNIST WILL NOT BAR PRESENCE

Sir Robert Horne Would Not Concede Victory to Communism.

GLASGOW, Sept. 15 (Canadian Press).—Sir Robert Horne, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, addressing a political meeting today, explained why he intends to go to Canada and the United States with the British delegation to the interparliamentary Congress notwithstanding the inclusion in the delegation of Shapurji Saklatvala, the Communist member of the House of Commons.

To refuse to go to attend the Congress because a representative of Communism insisted on going would be an object acknowledgment that the British delegates had come already under the domination of Communistic forces, Sir Robert said, and an admission that a single individual whose views were abhorred by the whole of Parliament and the great mass of people of England was able to dictate to them a course of conduc

WILL ENTERTAIN BRITISH ENVOYS

Have Not Considered Challenging Saklatvaka's Visit to Canada.

OTTAWA, Sept. 15.—Dissension in the party of British Parliamentarians who shortly are to visit Canada and the United States over the inclusion in the party of Shapurji Saklatvala, Communist M.P., is not in any way affecting the plans of the Canadians to entertain the visiting M.P.'s. It was learned here Monday that these plans are going forward without a hitch and it was pointed out that Canada does not attempt to rule on the eligibility of any of the personnel to participate in the tour, which is under the auspices of the Empire Parliamentary Association. Canada will receive the party as it is constituted in London and no distinction naturally will be made between the membership.

It was definitely learned that the immigration department has not even considered the possibility of challenging Mr. Saklatvala's right to visit Canada. He will enter as any other tourist and his observance of Canadian laws will be taken for granted.

It is recalled that the British delegation to the Empire press conference in Canada in 1920 included several Laborites, who frankly espoused extreme radical views not only in interviews but in public gatherings where the delegates were formally entertained. The Canadian authorities never found it necessary to interfere with these delegates in their tour of Canada.

One lamp may have a thin film of moisture on the inside, while the other is perfectly dry. The first lamp will have a much shorter life than the dry one.

Edison Mazda Lamps are tipless. This feature increases their ruggedness by over 25%. By always specifying Edison Mazda Lamps, you are assured of receiving the latest scientific development in incandescent lighting.

CORDOVA MEWS

CORDOVA MINES, September 14. — Miss Net Peace of Aylmer has resumed her duties as principal at the Cordova public school.

Mr. D. Barrows, accompanied by his sister, is attended the Toronto exhibition this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Young, are spending their vacation at Toronto Detroit and other points west.

Miss Anna Maloney is attending High School at Marmora.

Several from Cordova Mines attended Crowe Lake pavilion last Thursday night.

The teachers of the Cordova public school are busily engaged preparing their pupils for the annual fair taking place at Havelock.

Miss Myers of Trenton is engaged as teacher in the Rockdale school.

Mr. George Barrows is busy renovating his property on Vansickle Road.

Miss Phyllis Osborne, who has been living in Havelock, has returned to Cordova.

Little Miss Valla Johnston, who has been visiting with friends in Toronto, returned home last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Ellis entertained a number of their friends on Tuesday evening. Those present reported a very enjoyable time.

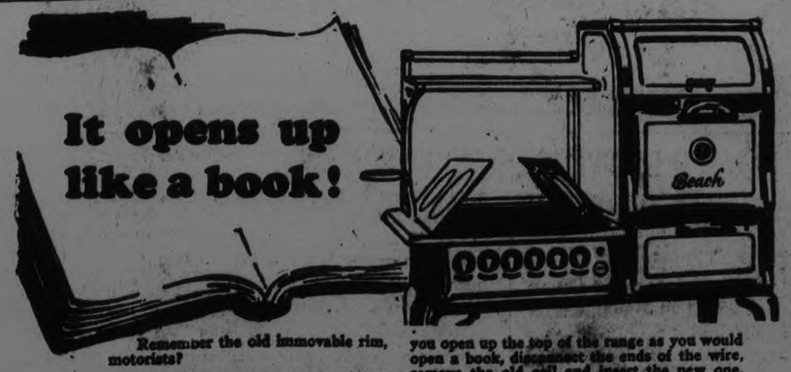
Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Loucks moved to their new charge at Kingston this week.

Mr. Carman Steenburgh is attending High School at Marmora.

Miss Veronica Maloney has resumed her duties as teacher on the Separate school staff in Toronto.

There are still many tourists passing through the village en route to the lake.

To overcome the 6,000-foot barrier of the Bitter Root Mountains, an Idaho mining company is using aeroplanes to transport 6,000 feet of steel pipe, weighing 60 tons, to its mines.



Remember the old immovable rim, motorists?

A puncture—then dirt, barked knuckles, delay!

Autoists nowadays would not put up with anything like that; but people are still buying electric ranges with many antique features.

An outstanding feature of the new Beach Electric Range is its accessibility for repairs.

To replace a heater coil in the cooking unit, you open up the top of the range as you would open a book, disconnect the ends of the wire, remove the old coil and insert the new one. You don't have to remove the burner or call in an electrician.

And remember — the Beach is the fastest electric range on the market—brings a quart of cold water to the boiling point in 8 minutes.

Ask your Beach dealer to show you a Beach Electric, or write direct for full information and prices.

Chinese Missionary Deciphers Oriental Writing on Toronto-Bought Dress.

VISITING HERE

Any of the feminine residents of the city, who are fortunate enough to possess a silk crepe dress with Chinese characters printed all over it, had better stay away from the Celestial keepers of laundries and restaurants, or they may afford these gentlemen some innocent amusement. A young lady resident on Bolivar street had a good deal of fun last week when a visiting gentleman, home on furlough from China, deciphered some of the symbols on her Canton crepe dress, purchased in Toronto. One of the most elaborate of the designs in the material signified "precious" in the sign language of the ancient Oriental land.

Rev. J. W. Hunter, with Mrs. Hunter and her two children, is at present sojourning at the home of Mrs. J. H. Kimberley, 488 Bolivar street, on furlough from Tsina , it the province of Shantung, where Rev. Mr. Hunter is registrar and acting treasurer of the Shantung University. Mr. Hunter is at present suffering from a temporary illness, but an Examiner representative had an interesting interview with Mrs. Hunter, a little lady, who was formerly Margaret Brownlee, a Normal student in Peterboro, going out later to visit her sister in Tsinan, where she met and married Mr. Hunter, who had just finished his twentieth year of service in China, and was for seven years actively engaged in field missionary work throughout the northern portion.

Tsinan, (pronounced Jee-nan, while Shantung is pronounced Shan-doong) is a city of between three and four hundred thousand people, walled about in the usual Chinese fashion with a wall thirty feet high, twenty feet across at the top, with a base nearly fifty feet thick. Here is the Shantung University, holding about three hundred and fifty students. It is a union institution, supported by the united efforts of between twelve and fifteen missions of different sects, including the English Baptists, the American, Canadian and Irish-Presbyterians, the English and Wesleyan and Canadian and American Methodists, as the various religions are divided in China. English, Canadian and American boards, with offices in London, Toronto and New York, manage its affairs. Rev. Mr. Hunter is an Anglican clergyman, sent out from England by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter came over on the C. P. R. Liner "Asia," manned like a majority of the boats during the seamen's strike, with a mixed crew of Russians and Philipines, and some Frenchmen from Indo-China, all speaking their polyglot tongues. One of the most comfortable sections of the entire journey, according to Mrs. Hunter, who spoke in high praise of the all-steel Chinese trains, was the twenty-four hour run from Tsinan to Shanghai.

Child Talks Chinese.

Their two children accompany Mr. and Mrs. Hunter: Harold, aged three years, and the year-old baby Allan. Harold, it seems, was quite proficient in the Chinese language, having the habit at home of answering in Chinese the questions put to him in English by his parents, but on his arrival in Vancouver, fun made of his Canadian children caused him to drop his Oriental language accomplishments altogether, and now he refuses to say a word in Chinese, although apparently understanding perfectly the stream of conversation poured out on him in that tongue by his mother. He prefers to converse in English, although he referred to the kitty at his present home in the very Chinese fashion of the "meouw-meouw." On the boat, before he dropped the language completely from his vocabulary, he remarked to his parents in Chinese, "this boat isn't ten parts steady, is it?" using the typical Chinese expression of "ten parts," the equivalent among the Celestials of our expression of "one hundred per cent."

Another typical Chinese expression used by the coolies, is the reversal of our mode in direction. We say "north-east," but the Chinaman says "east-north." He signifies all his directions by the compass, instead of saying "right" or "left" as we do. A recollection, too, of the Oriental belief that things seen are remembered more easily than things heard is recalled in the explanation of teaching carried on by one of the other members of the extensive corps at the Shantung University, who spends out his lectures on sanitary conditions and health by the aid of countless little models made from clay.

The power of the student body in China is rather hard to understand in a country where students are looked upon as a well-meaning, quiet class of young men and women, going about their studies with despatch and amiability, forming during their classroom days, a rather negligible factor in the life of the nation. In China, it appears, they are the most powerful, or among the most powerful, of the citizens of the country, and when they go on strike, as they do when their holidays don't match those of the publicly managed schools, and run amuck, shouting "Down with the foreigner. Boycott Japanese and English goods," it means a good deal. In Shantung University, according to Mrs. Hunter, the recent trouble came just at about the time when the students were about to disperse for the holidays and its pupils, although taking some part in the riots, were comparatively peaceful. The fifth year medical students took no part in the trouble whatever, preferring to remain in seclusion within doors until their more hot-headed companions had settled down.

LAWYER DROWNED IN FALL FROM BOAT

Daniel O'Sullivan Stepped Backward Through Opening in Railing.

TIMMINS, Ont., Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press.)—Daniel W. O'Sullivan, one of the leading barristers in Northern Ontario, was accidentally drowned in the Mattagami river Saturday evening. Mr. O'Sullivan was one of a party of guests on the steamboat "Minga" which was leaving Mattagami Landing for an evening trip to Sandy Falls, and it is stated that he stepped backward to the side of the boat at a point where the railing had been dropped for a gangway and fell into the water. He immediately struck out for shore and appeared to be swimming strongly, but sank from sight just as he reached some launches moored to the bank.

Physicians said he was in a critical condition, with little chance for life.

Hunting Big Game in Canada's Great Mountains

A Great Life, Camping By Virgin Lakes, Alive With Trout and Never Fished—And Roving Mountain Meadows Thousands of Feet High—Where Moose Roam Free

By H. GLYNN-WARD

YOU who love the wild, the vast unknown, if you have not yet penetrated into the remotest heart of British Columbia, and followed the creatures thereof to their lairs up at snow-levels, where mighty rivers are born, and that in company with men whose name is adventure, you have yet to live the best days of your life.

Of these men who make their way in parts where others seldom go, who laugh at risk and defy danger, who live so close to nature that she opens her heart to them, of such is George Beirnes of Hazelton, and if you can persuade George to take you out after big game into parts known to few, if any, other white men, you have done something worth while.

Beirnes came from the east of Canada out to the Kootenays in southern British Columbia, when he was a boy, worked his way up to the Yukon in time for the Klondike gold rush of '98, and has made his name one with the north ever since. He is fair, with a skin ruddy and seamed by sun and snow, and even the Indians have learned to put faith in those straight blue eyes of his. They set great store by the word of George Beirnes.

He is a big man, still in the prime of his life, big of body, big of heart and big in his outlook. If you say you are a friend of George Beirnes', you have a welcome to many a house, many a cabin and many a far teepee, between the Yukon and the line of the Canadian National Railway, between the coast and the far side of the Omineca country.

He has his own particular lair at his ranch twenty-two miles north of Hazelton, which latter is a village of past glories, a centre for many tribes of Indians, and where no tourists ever go because there is nowhere for them to stay, though if they only knew it, Hazelton is the loveliest, the most interesting and, incidentally, the pertheramost point on the whole of the Canadian National Railways.

From Hazelton, you follow north along the Yukon Telegraph Trail, which runs by the Skeena River as far as the Indian village of Kispiox, that silent settlement with weird totem-poles growing in its centre and swarming with pack-dogs of every size and breed.

Yukon Telegraph Trail

AFTER this you follow the Kispiox River, still along the Yukon Telegraph Trail, which is the only trail there is, and though grass-grown, it is quite navigable for the thirty miles; past the 17-mile bridge, past the ranch belonging to Davison the Icelander, and on till you come to George Beirnes' ranch, a great clearing of green meadows, skirted with light groves of poplar, birch and cottonwood: where you look west towards the Kitwancools and east towards the Kiskagaas Range, where the Kispiox River winds round the clearing and the speckled trout and glistening grayling dart unmolested through her waters.

Up on a hillock are the various log-buildings of the ranch and roaming far and near, the big herd of pack-horses that Beirnes uses every midsummer for the pack-train that supplies the nine cabins along the 200 miles north of the Y.T.T., and in the fall he uses some of them to take hunters out.

That hospitable kitchen is known far and wide. The Indians look in for a meal on their way out to their trap-lines and their hunting-grounds in the winter; you may see them with their dog-teams and themselves on snow-shoes, muffled to the eyes in fur. And they stop at the ranch on their way out again in the spring, just to say "Howdy" and say what sort of a catch they have made that season. The random prospector stops there, looking upon it as the last outpost of civilisation.

Black bears are as common as pigs in these parts and you are apt to come on a grizzly inconveniently near when you are least expecting him. But Beirnes knows the habits of the animals as he knows their feeding grounds, and he can take you out from the ranch to any of the four points of the compass and get you within gunshot of one inside the week.

In a four weeks' trip he can bring you to where the caribou range and show you mountain goat way up at snow-level in the mountains. If you want a record moose-head, he can take you due north into the Ground-hog country and into the Klappan Mountains, across the South Strikine River, coming home round by Tacla and the great Babine Lake, 400 miles in all, taking from five to eight weeks, but you are certain of a full bag—one moose, two caribou, two sheep of any one species or three altogether, two goats, three deer, three bear.

The moose in British Columbia do not yard up as regularly as do their brothers in the east, but in winter time they go in mortal fear of the big, hungry timber wolves, just the same. The wolves go about their hunting so strategically that even the gigantic, powerful moose shivers at the sound of their howl on a dark night when the snow is thick on the ground.

The pack splits into three divisions, one of which stays behind to yap and howl at the heels of the great beast that has no choice but to move on in front of them. The divisions on either side of him close in from time to time, thus forcing him to travel in the direction they choose, up and out of the valley, higher and higher up the mountain side, until they are just out of the timber.

This is their object, to get their quarry into an open spot where there are no trees for him to back up against, where there is no shelter whatever and he must fight for his life on all four sides of him at once, and here they all close in and kill.

You are apt to come on a grizzly inconveniently near when you are least expecting him.

George Burns with a full day's bag.

I should never have believed this but I know it must be so for George Beirnes told me. He himself has worked it all out from the tracks, and time and again he has come on a moose killed just above timber-line.

Another trip he takes is north along the Y.T.T. as far as Fourth Cabin and then striking east along an old mounted police trail, crossing Bear River just north of Bear Lake, on down the Omineca River and back by the Manson Creek Trail, across the Babine Lake and so home. Some 300 miles, taking up from four to six weeks.

There are four varieties of mountain-sheep. The real "bighorn," (Ovis Dalli) is found further south, but in the part we are writing about the grey sheep is found (Ovis Canadensis), with a much wider spread of horn, though not so massive at the base; also the Black or Stone's sheep, and further north in the Yukon, another variety still.

The mountain sheep is perhaps the hardest dying animal that exists, so that even if your stalking has been successful and your aim true, you have not necessarily secured your game. A guide once told me that he hit a ram twice and knew it must have been mortally wounded, yet it got away from him. He came upon it next day, tracking it by blood-stains, with a broken leg and a bullet-hole right through the lungs. Their vitality is well-known to be extraordinary, and it is probably for this very reason that they still exist in such goodly numbers, although their enemies are legion.

Home of Mountain Sheep

WHEN the mother sheep has weaned her lambs, high above snow-level, where they are fairly safe from marauders—except for the ever-watchful eagle—she has to face the choice of keeping them up there on starvation diet or taking them down to the lower levels to feed on the luscious herbs and young growth in the nooks and crannies of the rocks, where they must brave the daggers of prowling bear, wolf, wolverine and lynx.

She usually chooses the latter, and stands sentinel with ears alert to every distant crackle of a twig, while her babies frisk and frolic in much the same way as the ordinary home field variety.

Grand country this, north of Hazelton and south of the Cassiar district, scarcely known, uninhabited except by Indians, and unless you happen to run into some stray prospector, you may say goodbye to white men for all the weeks you are on the trail.

It is a great life, out among those un-mapped mountain ranges, camping at night by virgin lakes alive with trout, the peace of whose waters has never been broken by rod or line, trotting through mountain meadows thousands of feet high, when the air goes to your head like wine, and at other times pushing through the red and yellow forest, fresh with the scent of moss and fading bracken.

And then to sit round the camp-fire, tired out after a long day's trek and hungry enough to eat the hide off a hog's back, as they say. There was one old senator from the far off U.S.A. who went ahunting with George and he said he'd give all the banquets he'd ever eaten in New York for one of those camp-fire suppers.

Usually Beirnes takes along one of his favorite Indians, Peter Haimadan or Tommy Jack, and these are of the Hagwelgits, the Indians of the interior, who live entirely by meat. They imbibe meat as a school-boy gulps cream-puffs. Having done themselves well at the evening meal, they generally consider it necessary to partake of a "tit-bit" before they turn in for the night, so they cut themselves a three or four pound steak of moose meat and roast it on the end of a stick over the glowing embers, just by way of night-cap!

A great life, my brothers, and you couldn't get the like of George Beirnes away from it, no, not if you were to bribe him with all the riches of Broadway!

MEDICO'S EFFORTS IN TIRELESS SEARCH FOR CANCER MICROBE ARE CROWNED WITH SUCCESS

If Bacterial Cause of Disease is Proved a Cure Will Evolve.

BLUE RAYS USED

Discovery Should Spur Renewed Research in Scien-

The author of the following article is the Director of the Institute of Cancer Research, Columbia University, and one of the foremost American authorities in his field. He discusses the recent announcement from London that the cancer germ has been isolated by Dr. William E. Gye and J. E. Barnard, working under the auspices of the National Institute of Medical Research, and expresses the belief that if cancer is proved to be of bacterial origin, the discovery will be of the highest importance in pointing a way to the possibility of preventing cancer organisms from entering the human body.

By Francis Carter Wood, M.D.

For some time it has been known in scientific circles that the National Medical Research Council in England was working on certain aspects of the cancer problem, and there has just come over the wires an announcement that Dr. William E. Gye and some of his co-workers have been able to isolate an organism from the peculiar type of cancer known as the rous—sarcoma—thus completing one of the most brilliant pieces of research work which has appeared from the Rockefeller Institute in New York.

It will be remembered that about fifteen years ago Dr. Peyton Rous called attention to the fact that a well-known disease infecting fowls could be inoculated from one bird to another, and in a series of articles pointed out that the dried tumor would cause fresh growths when injected, and that also the tumor could be crushed and filtered through an unglazed porcelain tube and yet that the filtrate was capable of giving rise to a new growth of the same type as the original, which had spontaneously appeared in a chicken of the Plymouth Rock breed. Cancer in other animals, and also in man, cannot be transferred by crushed or dried cells or by a filtrate, so that it differs greatly from the chicken sarcoma.

Rous spent years in attempting to demonstrate the nature of this causative agent, but was unable with the means then at his command to achieve success.

The general assumption of the scientific world, however, has been that sooner or later some one would be able to capture the organism, especially since the methods of culture have been greatly improved of late, largely through the efforts of Dr. Hideyo Noguchi of the Rockefeller Institute and a group of American bacteriologists.

The kind of apparatus used to demonstrate very small particles is based upon principle of intensely illuminating the object sought and prevent any other light reaching the eye. Such an ultra-microscope will show particles which are so small that they can never be seen directly under the ordinary microscope. They shine with this reflected light like stars in the sky. The microscope works better also the more nearly the light is of one color and the more it approaches the blue.

Nearly twice as much can be seen with blue light as with red. Taking all of these facts into account J. E. Barnard of London has improved the present commercial apparatus, making it more powerful, and has thus brought the minute particles he and Gye are studying into the range of visibility. The statement made in the English papers that X-rays were used is erroneous.

Nevertheless, before Dr. Gye's discovery can be regarded as final, the technical details must be made available and the work repeated by others, for in science no one is infallible. There is not only a very stately array of bacteria which have been isolated from cancers of both human beings and animals, and valiantly defended by their discoverers as the final cause of the disease, but there are also a large number of other diseases in connection with which organisms have been found (some of them filterable), and yet as the years pass we are not certain which germ does the mischief.

Proof That Is Required.

The germ of poliomyelitis is of this filterable type. But even where a germ has been found in a diseased person it is not always easy to prove its causal relation. Influenza is a good example. The original influenza germ has had some pretty hard sledding, and whether we actually know the causative agent of the disease is questionable. So this new arrival in the cancer family will be welcomed by those who believe that cancer is a germ disease, and will be looked upon with some doubt by those who feel that the evidence is all against the bacterial origin of cancer.

But whether welcomed or not, proof will have to be finally furnished to show that, first, it does cause this kind of cancer, and, second, that it always does cause it. That proof may be available now or require years more of work.

Looking at the question from a general point of view, while we are waiting for Dr. Gye to publish all he knows, it is interesting to consider what will be the effect upon the general problem of cancer, especially from the human aspect, if Dr. Gye's work proves sound. Does it imply that in the near future cancer is going to cease to be the worst plague which afflicts the human race? Unfortunately, the answer must be, No.

In the first place, Gye's work has been done on one tumor of the chicken, and chickens have their own peculiar type of tumors, just as do dogs and cats, and mice and rats, and these tumors differ among themselves, and differ also in some respects from tumors which occur in human beings, so that what might be true for chickens would not necessarily be true for dogs and cats or mice or human beings.

Cells Get Out of Control.

Therefore, it is impossible to generalize from investigations made on chickens alone. Secondly, if we assume that a bacterial cause should be found for human cancer, will that simplify the problem? Not at all, except in prevention; for cancer is a runaway condition of the cells of one's own body, produce as far as we know by a great many agents and under limiting conditions of which we understand very little. There is absolutely no relationship between the cancer of the newborn baby which has developed while it was being carried in its mother's womb and the cancer of the person who has carelessly exposed himself to X-ray for a period of years, or to the cancer of an English chimney-sweep.

It is unthinkable that any common agent should act in all these types, for to return to tumors of children, in them, just after birth, highly malignant cancers in the abdominal cavity are sometimes found, made up of brain cells and muscle cells, in a position where there can be no brain and there can be no muscle. It is unthinkable that a germ can make brain and muscle grow where no such structures have existed.

Evidently such a tumor is produced by some malformation occuring at a very early stage of embryonic existence, the cells comprising it retaining those growth capacities which belong to the unborn child. A germ explanation hardly fits, for if the mother has transmitted the cancer germ to her offspring, how can she escape the same disease? So, too, it seems much simpler to assume that the soot which the chimney-sweep leaves on his body is irritating and makes cells grow, and after these cells have grown a certain length of time in a chimneysweep who is susceptible to cancer they break through the ordinary limitations which are placed upon cell growth and then we have a cancer.

X-Ray Produces Irritation.

In the same way X-ray does not directly produce cancer, but only a chronic skin disease, which, when it has lasted over a period of years in a susceptible person, may develop into a cancer, and, once the cancer has developed, what caused it is of little importance except in the matter of prevention.

Therefore, even assuming a germ or germs should be found, which despite the difficulties mentioned could explain the beginning of a cancer, the cancer will go on independently of the germ, and it is the cancer, not the germ, that we are fighting. The reason we know this to be so is that cancer can be cured under certain conditions merely by cutting it out or by exposing it to a certain amount of X-ray or radium rays. Such proper dosage of radiation is altogether insufficient in amount to kill any known germ, and any which may be present in the cancer cell will still be there after the action of X-ray or radium has killed the cells of the cancer.

Nevertheless, once a suitable dose has been given the cancer it does not return, while if an insufficient quantity has been given it always does return. It would seem, therefore, that there must be something else beside the germ, and that Dr. Gye suggests in his report.

Possibilities in Germ Theory.

If, however, a germ cause for cancer should be shown as the result of these experiments of Dr. Gye's it would not only be a discovery of the highest importance, rivaling that of Dr. Banting of insulin, but it would have an immediate practical value in the prevention of cancer, because of the possibility of preventing the organisms entering the human body, just as we have been able to diminish tuberculosis by preventing infection by contact, milk sterilization and other means, and to diminish typhoid greatly by improved sanitation and to check altogether cholera and plague.

Cancer would then fall into the group of diseases against which the Board of Health could carry on as active and effective warfare. Prevention would then become a far more important matter than cure, and the disease might ultimately become as unimportant a cause of death as typhoid and tuberculosis. This is the most important aspect of Dr. Gye's discovery, as I view it, for, as has just been pointed out, there is no reason to think that an anti-toxin produced from the bodies of the germs themselves will necessarily have any effect upon the cancer once growth has begun.

The situation is like an automobile standing on a grade. If a mischievous small boy comes along and releases the brake the punishment of the young rascal will do nothing to remedy the damage to the runaway car or the people in its path. In this fact lies the weak point of so many of the quack serums which have been prepared from a great variety of bacteria obtained from cancers.

For it has long been known that germs of all sorts are found in cancer. They are there only in transit, so to speak, through the body and are destroyed or eliminated and cause no damage. But if there is a germ which gives the cancer cell its impulse to grow, then the use of a serum would only be in prevention, not in treatment. The possibility of such prevention is very great—should Gye's work prove generally applicable to all types of human cancer.

Advocates Further Research.

It is evident, therefore, that this announcement from England is of the very first importance, and that extensive work in the same line should be pushed as rapidly as possible. It is to be hoped that the English, who have been a little slow in supporting medical research, and who have thrown every difficulty in the way of their investigators in this field by their extremely arbitrary and rigidly enforced anti-vivisection laws which prevent a doctor giving a hypodermic to a mouse but permits him to give a hypodermic to a child will now be a little more generous in view of this good work. It is to be hoped, therefore, that this discovery will incite sufficient interest to loosen up the Goernment purse strings toward the generous support of medical research.

Should Dr. Gye's organism not prove to have causal relationship to tumors other than the Rous chicken sarcoma, we can still be grateful that another brick has been placed in the foundation of the great edifice of our knowledge of cancer. For, despite the disappointment which is sure to be felt if the idea does not prove to be general, researchers on cancer all over the world will simply turn back to their desks with the same patience as before, hoping that some day light will come.

Cancer research is the most fatiguing sort of work because it does not offer the brilliant results which can be obtained with a minimum labor and a maximum of reputation in other scientific fields. Only those enter it whose whole-hearted interest lies in the solution of this problem. Those working in the field are poorly paid; their laboratories are all insufficiently endowed; the work is slow and expensive and too often produces no new facts to pay for months or years of hard work.

Two things are needed in this country; More research laboratories to advance the knowledge of cancer, and more financial support from the people of the United States of the educational work carried on by the American Society for the Control of Cancer, in order to enable that society to accomplish its aim of giving to every one in this country real knowledge that is already available concerning the correct treatment of cancer.

Wants Deeper Interest.

Every one in the United States over the age of 40 is interested in this society because it furnishes him with an intellectual rope-ladder down which he can in many instances escape when the ship of his health is scuttled by a cancer. The public will subscribe millions to take care of a few people shaken from their homes by an earthquake or flooded out by the rise of a river, and yet sit idly by while 100,000 people annually die of a disease not infrequently preventable and often curable.

This slight survey of a few of the aspects of this most obscure of medical problems may well be closed by congratulating Dr. Gye on his painstaking work, with the hope that he is right, and that he will soon prove it; but until the final proof comes, the public had better remember that at present the best means of combating cancer is a prompt diagnosis by a physician, combined with early surgery.

The Earth Is For All and All For The Earth

By N. REYNOLDS PACKARD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

BUENOS AIRES, (By mail to United Press).—That successful communism is not an idle vagary of dreamers and theorists but an actual fact in the history of South America is the opinion of students of history who have carefully investigated the remains of the early civilization of this continent. The remnants unearthed, as it is said by authorities on the subject, indicate that the ancient South American Indians lived happily under the principle, "The earth is for all and all for the earth."

In form the early communes of the first peoples of South America resembled most closely in their social theories and practices the old Romans "gens" which was based on blood relationship. Historians say, however, that the South American Indians had a more complex and a more successful communism than any other similar form of commonality and actually antedated the "gens" of the Romans.

The ancient communes in South America had their inception in the family which has it increased developed into a huge tribe in which individual property and enterprise was absolutely unknown. The tribe owned the land on which he roved and hunted, but owned it jointly with each member of the tribe.

"Glorifying" The Indian Girl.

These Indians did not glorify woman by placing her upon a pedestal to be worshipped and exempted from work. On the contrary the women of the tribe took an active part in the work, doing much of the drudgery and most of the disagreeable tasks.

The different duties of the tribe were assigned according to the aptitudes of the individual. If one was a good hunter, his function in the community was to provide food by his skill in the chase, or if another was adept as mixing herbs, he became the medicineman of the tribe.

That there was no evading of work was assured by the patriarchal chieftain who was backed in his authority by the entire tribe. And any person not fulfilling the task to which he was assigned suffered castigation as only Indian forebears knew how to administer.

Appreciated Art.

These people though an agricultural race had a high appreciation for art as is proved by many of the remains that have been unearthed. Sculpture and paintings, resembling the art of the ancient Babylonians and Egyptians, have been found among the remnants of the early civilization of South America.

Despite the most thorough investigations, students are still baffled as to how the particular aptitudes of the tribe members were determined. As in Plato's "Republic" this one phase of the commune seems to be the weakest part of the entire structure which as a whole is believed to have been a great success among the early Indians of South America.

The Worst about a bad liver is that, if it is not corrected quickly, you are going to have a bad time. Headache, Flatulence, Dizziness, Sallow blotchy skin, are symptoms of poison which the Liver and Kidneys and Bowels have failed to carry away as they should.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

make a sluggish liver active and keep the Bowels regular. They prevent worse troubling; they bring the rosiest of health to the cheeks; make bright again the eyes dulled by biliousness and make life worth while.

HASTINGS HAS MANY MINERALS

Striking Exhibit at Toronto Exhibition Contained 20 Varieties.

TALC IS VALUABLE

MADOC, September 15. — A few days ago, mention was made in a Toronto paper regarding the exhibit of ores presented by Hastings County in the Government Building at the Exhibition grounds. Few people realize that so many kinds of ore were found in Hastings. About twenty kinds are on exhibition th' year and it is interesting to note in connection with the gold that "the first of this precious metal to be discovered in Ontario, was taken up in the south eastern part of that county in 1866."

The following paragraph taken from the above mentioned article should be of interest to all residents of Hastings county:

"Hastings County contains the only talc deposits in Canada, and the only workable quantity of fluorspar in Ontario. Both are valuable products, the talc being used for talcum powder among other things, while fluorspar has provedan efficient flux in the manufacture of steel." "The talc mined at Madoc has no superior for many purposes, and during 1924, 10,718 tons, valued at $130,977, was mined there."

It may be remarked in passing that very fine specimens of Hastings county ores are also to be seen in the geological department of the museum in Toronto.

HOME COOKING SALE VERY PROFITABLE

Campbellford Ladies Realized Good Sum Despite Bad Weather.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 15. — The sale of home cooking and the tea held by the ladies of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Saturday afternoon, in spite of the rain which fell inbessantly all afternoon and evening, was one of the most successful functions of the kind ever given under the auspices of that congregation. The receipts were over $140, every article offered for sale, down to the last flower, being disposed of. Music was furnished by the Blue Orchestra. There were plenty of volunteer workers on duty.

The tea that was served from 6 to 8 was liberally patronized by business men and others, the tables being refilled as quickly as vacated by one set of patrons.

At the Communion Service at St. Andrew's on Sunday, fourteen new members were received into the congregation.

WEATHER DELAYS WALES' DEPARTURE

Snow Storms and Landslides Enforce Extended Visit in Chile.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 15. — (By Canadian Press Cable.)— Snow storms and landslides in the Andes have delayed for at least two days the departure of the Prince of Wales from Chile for Argentina. The Prince, originally scheduled to leave at one o'clock Sunday morning, may get away at 11 o'clock to-night as the trans-Andean railway has been cleared of the snows and slides which have caused traffic to be suspended for several days. However, the weather is threatening again, and further postponement of the journey may be necessary. Meanwhile, the Prince is staying at Vina del Mar.

OIL FIRE OUT.

Destroyed a Million Dollars Worth of Crude Oil in 50 Days.

BUCHAREST, Sept. 15—A fire which had destroyed a million dollars' worth of crude oil at Wildcat Well No. 2 in the newest extension of the Moren oil field belonging to the Romano-Americana Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil was extinguished today after burning fifty days.

The well, which was sunk in virgin strata, had reached a depth of 1,143 metres, the deepest in Rumania when it began a violent eruption on July 24. Immediately it caught fire because the tools blown from the hole struck a spark from the iron derrick.

The violence of the flow and the terrible heat defeated all efforts to extinguish the fire until engineers had compltd tunnels to the well's casing.

Fire fighting fluids were then pumped in and the flames extinguished.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

him to keep that pledge neither was it possible for his party, for they were simply allowed to be only His Majesty's Loyal Opposition, but what has the Liberal administration done under the Right Hon. W. L. King's guidance? They will puff themselves with conceit and list of a lot of things entirely local in their character. Built this dock, this building, this office, etc., they will say, but have they assisted in any feasible manner towards stemming the tide of immigration across that border line to the south of us?

Have they helped organized industry to keep open its doors and thus keep our returned men constantly employed at home?

Ask yourselves this question, men. Have they?

No, they have not. The promises made in good faith by Sir Robert Borden have not been upheld and how can they now go to the country with fresh promises on their lips when their past record shows plainly what a little they did and how much they might have done.

The returned soldier will do well to think well when casting his vote in October as his country's prosperity is hanging in the balance.

Mr. Meighed's promises are not of a visionary kind, they can become established facts if you put him into power. Vote for him through his representative and you can, at the very least, be assured of constant employment which will mean rosier prospects than we have had for a number of years. Don't be misguided or led away by inexactitudes but think for yourself and then vote.

Yours very truly,
D. G. MELTON.

THE ONE BIG ISSUE, SAYS MR. BURNHAM.

To the Editor of The Examiner,
Sir:

Mr. King has thrown down his gauntlet to the Farmers' Party of Canada. He says himself that he would not have gone to the country in an election if it had not been that his party had too small a majority of Liberals. Although the Progressives had given him support in preference to Mr. Meighen they had offered no suggestions to the House and were not necessary as a party. They should be something more or something less than a thorn in the side of the Liberal Government and Mr. King now wants the people behind the Farmers' Party to say at the polls whether they are going to support him or not, and if not he will refuse to carry on government. He declines to be worried to death for the amusement of certain electors. He is right. Leaders who are afraid to say "boo" lest someone will spring on them and throttle them can do nothing of value for Canada. If Mr. King is to be returned give him a clear Liberal majority. He cannot and will not go on as at present. He says so himself and what is more, says that this is the reason he has gone to the country. The issue at this election therefore is really between The Liberal Party and The Farmers' Party. One must quit or Mr. King will quit. It cannot be both. Whether the Farmers' Party will go out of existence at his demand is yet to be seen, but it is an extraordinary thing that he should have lefied the Farmers' Party of Canada, known as the Progressives, in this bold and determined way. It is the first time an election was ever held to decide a battle between the Farmers and the Liberals. Will it provoke increased hostility and a complete separation or will the Farmers yield? But that is the reason Mr. King goes to the country. He has declared it to be the One Big Issue. The West has promptly replied to his challenge by declaring that the West will send a solid bloc of 31 Progressive members and if it does, and the rest of the country does as well, it will under redistribution mean the defeat of Mr. King by the Farmers' Party of Canada. Not in the whole history of this country has there been anything like it before. It is such a split as may rend Liberalism not in twain for that is what Mr. King complains of now, but in a hundred pieces from which it will not recover at any rate in our time. Mr. King deserves credit for his courage. It is a bold thing to make the surrender of the Farmers the issue of an election and it will baffle Mr. Gordon with all his adroitness to face the farmers of this riding and tell them that they must get behind him or get out. But whatever happens let all those who have a thought of the welfare of their country go out and vote. The soldiers, poor devils, went far and furiously to uphold the honor of Canada and yet many of our "best" citizens will not even go round the corner to vote.

Is this patriotism? Are these people to do nothing to row the boat but beat their way? I am sure if they think for a moment of it they will blush for shame of the thought and will say "I will do all I can to help my country. I could not fight but I can vote "and then will go to the polls as people anxious to vote and not as people who 'don't care a snap'" as they say. It is the people who do not vote who leave the country at the mercy, often, of designing rascals. By not voting they deliberately try to hand this, our beloved country, like another Christ, over to those who would crucify it. And yet they blame the others! If more played the country this trick what a shambles it would be. The man and woman who, if they possibly can, will not go to the polls and vote leave so far as they care all good government and all hopes of good government at the mercy of the unscrupulous. It is possible that this is their view of rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's? Is it possible that this is all they care about their country? Are they aware that if all others were like them civilization and all that it includes would not last one miserable hour, and that in the general debacle they themselves would perish and leave behind not even their cries of honor at their fate to testify their belated repentance.

The explanation of the admission by the U.S. of our so-called pulp manufactured goods into that country is not less interesting and conclusive than the reply to the Hon. G. N. Gordon's statement reported in the Press wherein he says that the depression of Canadian industries is due to "over-industrialization," that is, that Canada already has too many industries. Perhaps that is why so many are closing up. The same reasoning would apply to the complaints of our farmers, viz.: that Canada has too many farms. What then are we about to bring more immigrants into this country for? It cannot be to go into new factories and it cannot be to go into the over-farmied farming industry. We want fewer workers, not more, if that is the case. What are we to do with them when we get them here? The answer is that if "over-industrialization" is a fact, as Mr. Gordon alleges, we ought to close up many of our works, quit many of our farms and ship people out of the country, not into it. No, no. This is floundering. This is not the way our neighbors grew to be what they are. They increased their industries as they were needed and checked immigration, and that is what we ought to do. Is that not so? Pouring more people into an 'overindustriatized" country whether it be in one form of industry or another spells disaster. We Canadians must not hasten too fast but we are doing it as an alarming rate. We will soon be like the python that swallowed an elephant or like the man who, because water is good, drank a barrel of it. We have indigestion. That's what's the matter with us and in order to make suffering to the end we are taxing ourselves to death. We must call a halt and that "right early." But if you are satisfied with things as they are, vote for Mr. King. I do not want to put Mr. Gordon up a tree at all but where does he put himself when he says that Canada is over-industrialized and that we do not want more urban settlers in this country. That would mean "goodbye" to all hope of a Greater Peterborough and Greater Canada. He can't mean just exactly what he says. He must mean that until we make the things we are importing from Germany, etc. We want no more industries and no more people in the towns. But surely that won't do. I would respectfully suggest to Mr. Gordon that he shold say that until we have some hope of progress and work for the people we should not ask others to come. That would be right and then immediately he should vote for a tariff that will increase, of necessity, our industries and our cities. He would condemn us apparently to total and perpetual stagnation and sure enough it is here accordingly.

Now as the reproach of partyism is that it does not always tell the whole truth I will refer frankly to the Railway Question which Mr. Meighen and Mr. King have locked horns about. Mr. Meighen is reported in The Examiner as having said at Bethany that "The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was built 20 years ago against the advice of Sir Robert Borden." The whole truth is more than that. The whole new transcontinental scheme was the sole issue at the election in 1904 especially that part which was to be built by the nation known as the National Transcontinental, from Fort William to the sea. Cox can't wait to built the Grand Trunk Pacific part of it. In 1904 the Conservative party was beaten on the issue. The country laughed at us then but there isn't so much laughing just now. The whole scheme has collapsed as it was before the country in 1904. But it was not the Liberal party that took over the C.N.R., it was Sir Robert Borden and Mr. Meighen who added this awful burden, with its preposterous over-capitalization, to the load the poor taxpayer is paying. And not only that, but for fear he would lose "public ownership" as an election cry when Mr. Meighen began his leadership of the Conservative party, or what was then called "The National Liberal and Conservative party", he charged Mr. King when Mr. King was returned to power with being hostile to the public ownership of the C.N.R. and national or publicly owned railways generally. It would have been a grand thing for this country if this charge had been true. Mr. King, however, yielded to the pressure and refuted the charge by securing Sir Henry Thornton. We paid $750,000,000 (most of it, overvaluation) for the C.N.R. when it was taken over by the National Liberal and Conservative party, with all its preposterous little branch lines, many of which Thornton had to close up, and we have paid the same amount for the other transcontinental system and all its run-down G.T.R. property, all because Mr. Meighen took over the C.N.R. and because Mr. King let himself be guided into ratifying it. We paid half our national debt for the privilege of owning these railways and their watered stock and we have paid hundred of millions in cold cash besides in yearly deficits. "What fools we mortals be." The money lender rejoices and the mass of the people bear the burden because all taxes are added to the cost of things to the citizens with least purchasing power and that is the great mass of the people Mr. Meighen and Mr. King are to blame for humoring the people in their silly craze for public ownership. Me. Meighen more than Mr. King but it is the people themselves who are chiefly to blame and they are surely paying for it. The truth is these great systems were unloaded on the country and strange to say, the country seems delighted with it. However, we know where our money is all going. It is going in taxes to pay the people who loaned the money and to pay the increased wages of the employees on those railways. It is a consolation to know that somebody is doing well out of it, If ever there was a farce it is this public ownership which takes over watered railways and suppresses all private enterprise even when controlled by a People's Railway Board. That is the whole truth about the railway question and the less Mr. Meighen says about it and Mr. King also the better it will be for their reputations and for the happiness of the country.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS MEET

CHILDREN TOO DEVOTED TO AGED PARENTS CAN BE A VERITABLE PLAGUE TO THEM

"If Our Grown Children Really Want to Make Us Happy," Says an Old Mother, "the Best Way to Do It Is to Give Us a Little Freedom and Let Us Go on Sprees By Ourselves."

The other day I ran across an old woman friend of mine, who is in her hale and hearty seventies.

"Why," I exclaimed in surprise, "I thought you were going to Europe this summer!"

"So did I," she responded. "All winter I have been dreaming about going across and revisiting old scenes, and reviving old memories, for I haven't been abroad since the war. I had got my clothes together and had my passage engaged, and was looking forward to getting on as a child does to Christmas, but at the last minute my children decided that they didn't think it best for me to take the trip. They thought I was too old, or too something, and that something might happen to me.

"And they made such a bother about it, were so worried about it, and nagged me so about it, that I gave it up to please them, and I am so disappointed that I could sit down and howl ever time I think about it.

"You see, my dear," she went on ruefully. "I am one of those mothers who are afflicted with devoted children, and they do their duty to me so perfectly that they keep me a prisoner, without a single vestige of personal liberty nor any more privacy than Irvin Cobb's goldfish in a bowl.

"I appreciate it. When I think how good, and kind, and sweet, and tender they are to me I am on my knees before them thanking them. But there are times and seasons when I feel like telling those mothers who complain about how their children neglect them that they don't know when they are well off.

"For, believe me, my dear, to be chicken-pecked is worse than to be hen-pecked. And the poor victim is more helpless, somehow. Because a mother can't run away from her brood, especially when she knows that their tyranny is inspired by nothing but love.

"You can't for instance, throw a plate at the heads of your children, as I often long to do, when they sit like a jury of dietitions on everything you eat. I never have a single meal without having to listen to a chorus of protests: "O mother, don't take a second cup of coffee. It might keep you awake." "O mother, don't you think that cheese souffle is too rich for you?" "O mother, do eat some of this nice oatmeal instead of meat. It is so much better for you." "O mother, you are surely not going to eat any more of that candy."

"And so on, and on. Yet I have a better digestion than any of them, and in seventy-odd years might reasonably be supposed to have got a pretty good working knowledge of my stomach and its eccentricities and peculiarities. Moreover, at my age, eating is about the only unalloyed pleasure that is left me, and I think I might have that joy in peace.

"And it has been years since I have been permitted to indulge my own taste in clothes. My dear, devoted daughters are very solicitous that their mother should look nice, and so every now and then they suggest to me that I need a new dress or a new bonnet, and one or the other of them takes me by the hand, so to speak, and leads me downtown and picks out for me what she considers appropriate.

"It apparently never occurs to them that I have any preference in the matter or that my taste doesn't coincide with their tastes, and that even if their taste is better than mine, I have a right to buy the clothes that fire my fancy, inasmuch as I am paying for them and have to wear them.

"As for going out alone, why I am not even let out on good behavior. My faithful guards are always at their posts, and they ride with me when I ride and walk with me when I walk. I am ever under their vigilant eyes, and it gets on my nerves until I feel like running away.

"I am not permitted to go downtown by myself. They wouldn't let me dream of taking a trip alone. Every time I move I have to be tagged by one or the other of my devoted children, who is there to see that I don't get run over by an automobile, or get lost in a department store, or fall out of the car window.

"And I get so fed up on my children and all this taking-care-of-mother stuff that I feel like shaking the stupid darlings and telling them that what we old people want is to be let alone and be permitted to do what we want to do in the way we want to do it.

"It is better for us to have a tummy ache now and then than to be nagged about everything we eat, and most of us would rather be run over by an automobile and killed in the end than to be kept a safe prisoner, without any liberty of action.

"You see, getting old doesn't change our characteristics. It merely intensifies them; and those of us who have led full, busy, independent lives and dominated our little worlds don't take kindly to having to obey our children, and having them tell us where we get on and off. It is a pity our children can't realize this, and that if they really want to make us happy the best way to do it is to give us a little freedom and let us go off on sprees by ourselves.

"Suppose that 'something' they are always talking about does happen to us? We have lived out our lives, anyway, and we would rather have one year of doing as we please than ten years of being chicken-pecked."

About Ourselves And Other People

By Winifred Black

A SAFE COURSE FOR A VERY TIMID SOUL

"Yes," said the comfortable little person, "I'd love to go abroad. I'm just crazy to see London and all the queer old places you read about in Dickens.

"And after London I'd love Paris. They say its beautiful with all those boulevards and cafes and lights twinkling and the shops and all.

"And Rome—it must be wonderful to be in Rome—those magnificent cathedrals and the old castles, and the River Tiber, and all history, and all the romance around you like a veil.

"Oh I would love to go abroad—but I'm so afraid of the water—Id never dare cross the ocean, never.

"My husband is the same way, he's afraid of the water too. Why last year we went East to the seashore and he put on a bathing suit and I just sat on the beach and trembled—but he didn't go in very far. He was afraid of the waves, too. I was glad he was, I can tell you.

"We're going to Colorado this year—we've been wanting to go for ten years, but I'm afraid of the mountains, they always scare me, even when I see them in the pictures.

"My husband feels the same way, but my daughter that's married lives in Colorado and there's a new baby and we've jut got to go that's all. Daughter says we won't be afraid of the mountains when we get used to them."

In an hour's conversation it developed that the comfortable little woman was afraid of water and afraid of lightning and afraid of thunder.

She was afraid of railroad trains and afraid of automobiles, and she was afraid of burglars, and afraid of pickpockets.

She was afraid of snakes, and afraid of spiders, and afraid of caterpillars, and afraid of horses, and afraid of dogs—

And she seemed to be proud of all her fears.

What a terrible thing it must be to live surrounded by terrors, or maybe she gets a thrill out of it, poor little thing.

I didn't see her husband. I'm afraid I wouldn't like to look at him, if I did see him.

I wonder if he tells other men that he's afraid of water, and afraid of mountains, and afraid of lightning, and afraid of burglars. I don't believe he does, do you?

No, I don't believe the comfortable looking woman is so very comfortable after all.

If I felt the way she does, I'd put on a tin suit of armor and cover my head with a blanket and lock myself up in a high tower and pretend I was living—and be done with it.

Wouldn't you?

CANTON CREPE POPULAR

Canton crepe continues to be one of the most popular fabrics for fall frocks with flat crepes and satins developed also in the dainty dresses that are featured by circular flares and godet draperies on the skirts, embroidered medallions on panels and ties, and sleeves that are in most cases long, and incline to the peasant type. Jabot ties are much in evidence, and there are a few models with the very new high collar, tying in front on one's ear, in the turtleneck fashion, or worn loose, as a scarf collar.

Amber, pansy purple, pencil blue and navy black and cocoa brown, are among the favorite shades for autumn wear.

Flannel frocks for early fall wear invariably show the long, rather tight sleeve, with small, neat cuffs. The long, slim lines of previous seasons still prevail, with skirts showing the popular flare effects and side pannels trimmed with braid and buttons. The collars on these little frocks are mainly of the open, flat mode, and finish with narrow ties. They come in pansy purple, peacock blue, green, brick, grey, reindeer, rose, or in black, navy and sand, with white hairline stripes.

MILK FOR BEAUTY

CHICAGO, Sept. 15 — (United Press).—Drink milk if you want to be beautiful.

At least this is the dictum of Miss Meta Given, food expert at the University of Chicago.

"Those who drink milk every day are likely to have a very soft skin and sufficient color in the cheeks to distinguish them readily among even the healthiest who are not milk drinkers" says Miss Given.

"Milk is the best body builder because it contains every structural element."

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl in my teens. I love a young man whom I like very much, but my parents object to our going together. He wants me to marry him, and although I love him I can not do it. What shall I tell him?

LULU.

LULU: This is an old problem, Lulu, and one impossible of adjustment by an outsider. The only thing for you to do is to decide once and for all whether you will abide by your parents' advice or follow the dictates of your heart. If you "like him very much" it would be well to remember that you may regret it for a long time, if you give him up. On the other hand, a girl in her teens very seldom knows the world and its people as well as her parents, who have been over the road and know its pitfalls. Why not take the middle course and ask the young man to wait for, six months for a definite answer. If he truly loves you, he will do that willingly, and if he doesn't, you are better off without him.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I have taught school for two years and have secured my permanent certificate. Would it be better to continue teaching or get married?

SMILES.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I have a boy friend who has gone away and he promised to write. Is it proper for me or him to write first?

DARK EYES.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

Is it proper for the girls to kiss the boys if they are not engaged?

DIMPLES.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am going with a fellow and we are about to be married. I think a great deal of him but my parents are against us getting married and are trying to stop it. Would it be wise for me to give him up for my parents?

SUNSHINE.

As the four young ladies whose letters appear above are extremely ecomonical, and used only one small sheet of paper, (written on both sides, something which the printers dislike immensely) I am answering their effusions en masse, as it were:

SMILES: If you have someone in view whom you love, I would advise you to get married.

DARK EYES: It might be advisable for you to wait for the young man to commence the correspondence, especially as he promised to write when he went away.

DIMPLES: The question of propriety with regard to kissing is a debatable one. However, even in the modern age, it is hardly the thing for girls to force osculatory affection on boys to whom they are not engaged.

SUNSHINE: By no means. If you think a great deal of him, marry him. Then, if you have made a mistake, you, and not your parents, will have to suffer for it.

You will find many things you thought you couldn't afford in the Classified Ads. of the Examiner.

IN THE KITCHEN

By Jeanette Norton

WHEN PLUMS AND PUMPKINS ARE PLENTIFUL.

Early fall is the time pumpkins and plums are at their best and there are many ways to use them that are too frequently overlooked.

Fall Pumpkin Pies.

Take a small, heavy, ripe pumpkin and cut it into small pieces, remove seeds and pith then peel them. Put into a preserve kettle and cover with cold water to which add a teaspoonful of salt. Bring to boil, and cook until the pumpkin is tender, then drain. Mash the pulp until dry and free from all lumps. There should be between three pints and two quarts when mashed. Add to it a teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of molasses, a small cupful of salt butter, six beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of ginger, A teaspoonful of mixed spices, and a small cupful of cream. Beat well.

A Western Plum Pie.

Select three dozen good-sized plums, steam them, prick them several times with a needle, wash and cover them with cold water. Bring to boiling point, then cook gently until tender. Drain off the juice and let the plums cooled Add two cupfuls of sugar to the juicer and cook five minutes, skimming carefully, then thicken with cornstarch dissolved in a little cold water to the consistency of cold honey, then cool slightly. Line the pie plates with rich short crust and fill with the plums, then turn in as much juice as the pies will hold. Add the top crusts and bake until the crust is done.

Italian Pumpkin.

Remove seeds and pare half of ar small pumpkin and cut it into thin strips. Parboil in salted water until tender but not soft. Drain dry, then saute in butter for a few minutes. Season with pepper, salt, a little butter and sprinkle lightly with Parmesan cheese.

Green Gage Plum Cobbler.

Line a shallow square pan with good short pie crust. Wash, stem and prick green gage plums that are ripe and sweet and place a later in the crust, then sprinkle with a small cupful of sugar in which a teaspoonful of starch has been mixed. Add another layer of plums then sprinkle with another small cupful of sugar. Add four tablespoonfuls or orange flower water or orange juice and bake until crust and plums are done. Serve hot or cold with whipped or plain cream.

Pumpkin Roly Poly.

Make the usual roly poly crust of two cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of baking powder, and a half teaspoonful of salt. Work in two tablespoonfuls of butter and then enough milk to make to a half inch thickness. Have ready two cupfuls f oboiled and mashed pumpkin, add to it a cupful of sugar, a half cupful of raisins, a teaspoonful of vanilla, a teaspoonful of ginger, a teaspoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of cream. Roll the dough and pinch the ends and place in a floured cloth. Plunge in boiling water and cook an hour and a half. Or lay without the cloth on a buttered plate and steam for half an hour.

NOT WINTER YET.

The young lady above is not anticipating cold weather and wearing earmuffs. She is simply displaying a new type of hat that certain milliners declare to be a coming style favorite. The young lady below, a close-fitting chapeau suitable for motoring. The silk scarf is of plush red, the only note of color on the dust grey silk gown with sleeveless bodice.

A FASHION MODEL'S DIARY

By Grace Thorncliffe

AN EPINARD GREEN REP FROCK FOR DAY WEAR.

Madame waxes most enthusiastic over the new Fall shades.

To-day she came into the room where we manikins were sitting about and announced:

"I do want to show you girls some of the loveliest materials I have seen for years."

Save for Buttons This Epinard Green Rep Frock Has No Trimming.

We all hopped up and danced attendance, for we do love to know all that goes on in the world of clothes.

Madame had over her arm several bolts of gorgeous material, and she seated herself in a low chair and prepared to let us look to our heart's content. She announced:

"First, let Pam slip on that new epinard green rep that she finished to-day."

Pam was delighted, and had soon fastened the trim straight skirt at the hip, and slipped into the tunic top, which I fastened down the back for her with its smart nickel buttons.

The dress had wide box pleats in the lower part of the tunic and was finished with a Dutch collar trimmed in six nickel buttons.

"You see what a beautiful darkish green this epinard color is," Madame said, as Pam demonstrated by walking about in the frock.

Then Madame queried:

"I suppose you all know that 'epinard' is the French word for 'spinach'?"

We all knew it, or said we did, except Veronica, and Madame threatened to start a class in French. Then she continued:

"Now the other shades I have here will be easy, for they are all described by plain American words."

"How about fog gray, isn't that more English?" asked Gaby.

Madame smiled at the attempt at wit, and explained that fog gray frocks were so named because they combined two shades of gray.

Then she held up a beautiful piece of "geranium petal" duvetyn and explained that the same color came in all fabrics, and was especially lovely in velvet and crepe.

The next bolt of crepe was in the beautiful "golden pheasant" shade.

Madame went on to explain that the latter two colors were self-explanatory, and then she mentioned "boise de rose."

We all knew that this was nude with a bit of red in it, as Madame had been featuring this smart tint in many of her frocks.

At a cost of $2,500,000, the Mystic Shriners of Los Angeles are building a magnificent temple which will accommodate 25,000 persons under its roof at one time.

LONDON LASSIES BOXED FOUR ROUNDS, WITH YOUNG MAN AS PRIZE TO WINNER

Brother Throws Up Sponge When Girl Dissolves Into Tears After Second Vicious Jab from Her Opponent

Two London girls fought with boxing gloves for the hand of a husband in Clerkenwell.

The combatants were about twenty years old, and had agreed that the winner of the fight should be led to the altar by a certain young man.

They met to fight six one-minute rounds with eight-ounce gloves. The contest was refereed and seconded in true professional style.

Both the combatants had trained for a fortnight, advised by their friends.

Round one was very uneventful. Both the girls, who fought in the plainest of short dresses, without any trimmings, seemed afraid of each other.

Round two, however, provided fireworks. One of the girls landed an upper-cut which nearly put her opponent out of action, but she recovered, and the rest of the round provided no excitement.

During round three both were cautious. Neither would take risks, for both were keen on marrying.

Round four was the final round. The girl who had previously damaged her opponent landed another vicious jab, and at this her opponent dissolved in tears, and her second, who was her brother, threw up the sponge in professional style.

Thus ended in tears one of the most remarkable contests London has ever witnessed, and the victor walked away in triumph with the purse—the husband-to-be.

COUNTRY HOUSE IS THRICE ROBBED

Thieves Stripped Surrey Manor While Occupants Were Absent

MYSTERY KEY

Found Beside Rifled Safe But Did Not Fit Anything

A mysterious £3,000 jewel robbery at an old country house is puzzling the Surrey County police.

The haul was made at the Manor House, Chiddingfold, the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Jenkinson, and the only clue which the police have is a skeleton key, badly cut, which was found on the floor near the safe which had been robbed. A £300 reward is offered.

Three times this year has the Manor House been burgled. The thieves had evidently made themselves thoroughly familiar with the household arrangements.

FAMILY ABSENT.

They entered by a side door while the family and servants were at a fete in the rectory field, and rifled the safe in Mrs. Jenkinson's bedroom.

Their booty included many diamond ornaments of great value, but Mrs. Jenkinson is particularly concerned about the loss of her engagement ring and her little boy's christening watch.

It is believed that the thieves must have stolen a key to the safe from one of Mrs. Jenkinson's bunches. The skeleton key that was found would not fit the lock.

BURNING CANDLE IS SILENT SELLER

Four Centuries Old Custom for Disposal of Church Acre

A remarkable auction sale is announced to take place at Chedzoy, near Bridgwater.

The auction, which is held every 21 years, is for the letting of "Church Acre," left in 1490 by one Yea, with instructions that the sale should take place during the burning of half an inch of candle, the last bidder prior to the candle being consumed becoming the purchaser.

The proceeds are vested in the rector and churchwardens for the time being, to be expended as they think fit upon repairs to the village church. For four centuries the custom has been observed.

The half-inch of candle rests upon a layer of tin placed upon an upturned eggcup. As the rector applies a match to the wick the company make the old room of the Manor House Inn ring with hearty cheers.

"ON APPRO" IS RUSE TO SATISFY VANITY

Women Get Dresses for Evening's Wear and Return Next Day

Departmental heads of the big West End stores were the least surprised of all the people who read the statement made at the Draper Summer School at Balliol College, Oxford, that women customers took away dresses for an evening, wore them as their own, and returned them the next day as articles that do not fit. They all know of more surprising cases.

Inquiries among them show that often dinner-services that have been out "on appro," as it is called in the trade, and are returned the next morning, have really been borrowed for some special festivity, such as a wedding or evening party.

In one case a fur saleswoman who sat in the stalls of a theatre saw a woman wearing a fur which she had sent out that day, and was duly returned the next morning.

Thousands of articles of personal or home adornment are borrowed for an evening by the "on approval" ruse simply to satisfy the vanity of a moment.

BOYS FIND SKULL ON CEMETERY ROAD

The Mold (Flintshire) police buried a human skull, with dried flesh and hair adhering to it.

The top of the skull had been sawn off, and at first foul play was suspected, but it is now believed that the skull was one which had been the subject of a post-mortem examination, and by some means it had been lost on the way to the cemetery.

It was found by some boys among some nettles in Westminster road, about 100 yards from the cemetery.

STRANGE THINGS FOUND IN A WOMAN'S HANDBAG

A motorist at Hoghton, near Preston, found a woman's handbag on the main Bolton road. He pulled up, searched the bag for an address, and found that it contained: Seven lace handkerchiefs, three Japanese flags, eighteen cigarettes, three Felix cats, one powder puff, false teeth, Mascot dog, a French penny, a live frog.

PUT BABY BOY IN THE WATER BARREL

Mother Thought Neighbor Was Joking When Told Truth

The Coroner for East Cumberland held an inquest at the village of Cumwhinton, on Wednesday, on the body of Joseph Nicholson, aged seven months, found drowned in a water barrel.

In connection with the case, a charge of murder has been preferred against Isabella Ivinson, aged 32.

Mrs. Nicholson, the child's mother, informed the Coroner and jury that she went to an allotment to dig some potatoes, leaving the child with the next door neighbor, Mrs. Ivinson. On her return she said to Mrs. Ivinson: "Is Joseph asleep?" Mrs. Ivinson replied, "No, I put him in the water barrel." Witness thought Mrs. Ivinson was joking, but not finding the child she eventually looked into the yard water barrel and discovered the body.

The police evidence was that when the woman was arrested she had a wild, vacant stare.

The jury returned a verdict of "Wilful murder," and the Coroner committed Mrs. Ivinson to Carlisle Assizes.

The police proceedings have been adjourned for a week.

DESCENDANT OF KINGS TO EMIGRATE

Sir Michael Bruce Says Dominions Best Place for Active Men

Sir Michael Bruce, a descendant of the kings of Scotland, was married yesterday to Miss Doreen Dalziel Greenwell, of Cheltenham, at a London register office.

Though not yet thirty-two, Sir Michael has had amazing experiences. he has been a trooper in the British South African Mounted Police, shot big game in Rhodesia, edited a newspaper in Rio de Janeiro, and worked as an engineer in Brazil.

During the war he saw active service on three fronts and was seriously wounded three times.

"In a few months my wife and I will go to Australia as ordinary settlers under the Government scheme," he said to a press representative after the wedding. "I intend to start sheep farming.

"The prospects in this country for a young man who wants a really active, outdoor life are not bright. My opinion is that such as I are far better off in one of the Dominions."

BOBBED HAIR WAS CAUSE OF BURNS

A servant who was fatally burned while standing on the fender to admire herself in the mirror after having her hair bobbed was not killed in the course of her employment, ruled Judge Chapman at Grimsby, when he disallowed the claim of the parents of Elvina Sinden, 18, for compensation from her employer Mr. E. Allenry, a butcher.

The parents contended that the girl's clothing caught alight while she was poking the fire, but Mr. Allenry's daughter said she had just previously bobbed Elvina's hair, and her clothing probably ignited while she was standing on the fender to study the effect in the mirror.

YOUNG BOY SHOWS COOL COURAGE

A double tragedy, reported to the Manchester police from Blackley, disclosed the remarkable courage of a 14-year-old boy, Harold Bowker.

With four other lads, he had improvised a raft, floated it on a reservoir belonging to the Ashenhurst Dyeing Company, and got aboard. The raft capsised and all were thrown into the water.

Young Bowker alone remained cool. He held up Albert Farrell, 10, whom he thus enabled to get back on to the raft, and, leaving Farrell safe, he reached Arthur Tunstall, 13, and got him, too, aboard the raft.

Robert Tunstall, 10, of Barnes street, and James Rushton, of Belper street, both of Harpurhey, could not be found. Both were drowned.

INSECTS ARE CAUSE OF FOUR DEATHS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Three Fatal Results from Bite of Gnat are Recorded

FEAR OF WASP

Man Twice Stung Died from Shock at Third Attack

Lieut.-Commander Jeffrey K. Laughton, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, died in Haslar Naval Hospital from the results of a gnat bite which he received a few days ago. This is the third death from a gnat bite reported within a week.

"Death from a gnat bite is usually due to poison entering the wound which the gnat has made," said an eminent medical authority. "It is not a question of the poison in the bite of the gnat itself; it means, rather, that the streptococcus penetrates the wound, and, entering the blood, causes septicaemia. A bite in the face would probably be more dangerous than in any other part."

Sir Ronald Ross, the specialist in tropical diseases, stated that a gnat bite is not of necessity fatal. "There is occasionally some dirt on the proboscis of the gnat," he said, "which enters the wound. This sets up blood poisoning."

FATAL PREMONITION.

William Robert Doney, aged 48, a Newport haulier, who died from the sting of a wasp, had lived in dread of wasps. He had been stung twice, and he told his wife that the third would kill him.

"If a wasp entered the kitchen," said Doney's wife at an inquest, "he would change color."

Dr. Ponegy stated that there were only two previous cases of fatal wasp stings. He said, in reply to the coroner, that a previous injection of the poison into the blood would make Doney sensitive.

The coroner said that great generals were sometimes apprehensive at the presence of a cat, and in this case the man feared wasps. He recorded a verdict of "Death from shock following a sting by a wasp."

RELIGIOUS RELICS BRING NO REWARD

To Soldier Who Found Sacred Bones in Ruins of Peronne

No reward has reached William Carter, the Thornton Heath fish-fryer, for handing over the so-called "golden reliquary of Peronne" that he found, during the battle of the Somme, in the ruins of Peronne. The reason given is that the intrinsic value of the relic is only a few pounds.

In a letter that has been forwarded to Mr. Carter, the Archbishop of Peronne, who signs himself "Charles Accart, Archbishop of Peronne," writes:

"The frame is gilt and the ornamentation surrounding the sacred relics (the bones of saints) are simply gilt paper. So the truth is very different from the invention."

The relic is back again in the hands of the Clarisser nuns, formerly of Peronne, but now at Ameins, who lost one of the pair they possessed before the bombardment of Peronne.

CENTENARIAN GETS ALL SUPPLIES FREE

Woman Walked to London Hospital for Minor Operation at 102

Mrs. Mary Agnes Haddican, who is 102 years of age, was admitted to the Royal Northern Hospital, Holloway, for a minor operation. She walked from her home in Andover road, Holloway, to the hospital, accompanied by a friend.

Mrs. Haddican, who was able to return home after treatment at the hospital, lives in a neat little bed-sitting-room, and is known among her neighbors as "Grannie."

Although she is able to live comfortably on the old-age pension, shopkeepers in the district supply most of her needs without asking a penny in return. Often "Grannie" is given her Sunday morning glass of beer from a neighboring public house free of charge.

Her husband died fifty years ago, and her seven children are also all dead.

TERRIBLE SEQUEL TO WAR MALADY

Famous Obstetrician Killed by Son-in-Law at Bristol

GAS POISONING

Tragic Delusion in Middle of Night at Country House

A graphic story of a terrible scene in the night at a country house was told at the inquest on Dr. Walter Carless Swayne, the distinguished obstetrician, of Bristol, who was fatally shot at the house of his son-in-law, Richard Louis Wreford Brown, a well-known West-country sportsman, at Selliach, near Ross, Herefordshire.

Richard Carless Swayne, son of the dead man and brother of Mrs. Wreford-Brown, said that Wreford-Brown, who married his sister in 1919 and had two children, was a retired lieutenant of the Welsh Guards. On August 12, Dr. Swayne was sent for to see Wreford-Brown. His father arrived about seven o'clock and they spent the evening harmoniously together. After dinner his father and Wreford-Brown went for a walk together, returning about 10.15 on quite pleasant terms, and about eleven o'clock they all retired for the night.

"After being asleep," continued the witness, "I heard two shots and my sister scream. I went into their room, and saw Brown flashing a revolver near the window. The room was in darkness. Brown shouted that the room was full of gas. As I approached Brown said, 'Who's there?' I didn't reply. Two further shots were fired into the ceiling. The bullet mark is there now. I laid down on the floor and crawled towards them. Brown jumped from the ottoman towards the door. I helped my sister to get under the bed.

"The youngest boy sleeping in the cot in the corner was frightened, and cried. I went back to my own room and secured my water-jug, which was full of water, and, on going back to the door, I found that Brown had gone to father's room. I heard my father tell Brown to go back to bed, and Brown said they were gassing him. Brown was invalided out of the army in 1919 through gas poisoning in the battle of Cambrai. Dr. Swayne said he was talking nonsense, and Brown replied that he was determined to get to the bottom of this. Brown then said, 'Stand back a yard or I fire,' and almost simultaneously Brown fired two shots. I heard father fall, and I ran into the room."

Superintendent Broad said that Wreford-Brown had made a statement, in which he said that he fired at Dr. Swayne to wound him and not to kill him.

The jury returned a verdict of murder against Wreford-Brown, and added a rider that the state of his mind should be inquired into.

YOUTH HAS HEART FOUR TIMES NORMAL

A post-mortem examination held by Dr. W. J. O'Donovan, a London Hospital pathologist, upon a 17 years old youth named Leonard Herbert Steptoe, who dropped dead outside his parent's home at Limehouse, revealed that his heart weighed 30 ounces.

When the inquest was held at Stepney, Dr. Guthrie, the coroner, said that he had never had a case at his court, even with an adult, in which the heart had approached that weight by several ounces. It was more than four times the normal, and was the more remarkable in that it was not due to fatty development. A verdict of Death from Natural Causes was returned.

CENTRE OF TOWN IS LIFTED FIVE FEET

Three Years' Task is Completed in Cheshire Without Mishap

BRIDGE LIFTED

Brine Pumping Was Cause of Subsidence of Business Section

The Borough Surveyor of Northwich, Cheshire, has reported to the town council the completion of the lifting of the centre of the town an average of five feet, an operation which has taken three years.

The whole of the business portion of the town, including ten streets, three banks, the county court and two hundred shops and houses, has been raised to counteract the effect of subsidence caused by the brine pumping which goes on continually beneath the town.

If the foundations had not thus been deepened the buildings would have collapsed.

The work has been carried out without stopping business in any way. Shops have been lifted while full of customers. Only seven or eight buildings, including the ancient Angel Hotel in the Bull Ring, have had to be demolished because they could not safely be lifted.

NARROW ESCAPES.

There has not been one mishap. Once a motor-lorry coming round a corner struck the bearer of one of the props on which a shop rested, but about an inch of the bearer kept contact with the prop and the building was saved from collapse.

In lifting, parts of the lower brickwork were removed and small hydraulic jacks inserted. These, using one or two quarts of water, raised from 10 to 150 tons of weight, and wooden Blocks supported the building until brickwork filled up the space.

Chemists' shops were lifted so carefully that not a bottle was disturbed. The town bridge was raised 5 feet at each end to bring it up to the new level of the town.

A fruiterer's shop with a frontage of 30 feet was removed bodily to another position. It was put on baulks greased with soap and pushed along a distance of 35 feet.

BOY ANGLER HAS VALUABLE CATCH

Investigation has now been made of the contents of the cash box which, with a woman's handbag, was brought out of Weymouth Harbor by a boy angler.

The contents consisted of £82 in notes, war loan and stock worth £1,959, cheque and bank books and some articles of jewellery.

The property has been identified from paper in the cash box and by the cheques as belonging to a Southampton shopkeeper, Mrs. E. Mutteen, of Manor Farm road, Bitterne Park, whose small sweet shop was broken into on June 7.

FLAPPING FLAG GAVE STEEPLEJACK SCARE

While repairing a statue of St. Helena on the 200 feet tower of Colchester Town Hall, W. Larkin, the steeplejack, of Bow, London, had a narrow escape from death.

The statue, which is in bronze and 12 feet high, is in some danger owing to loosened fastenings.

Larkin was about 20 feet below the statue when a large flag hanging from a window was blown by the wind around his legs. The steeplejack, taken unawares, was just able to grasp one of the bronze ravens which ornament the tower to prevent him-

ENGLAND'S OLDEST MARRIED COUPLE HAVE FETE DAY

Kentish Darby and Joan Celebrated Birthday Over Century Mark

GOOD MEMORY

Shook Hands With Iron Duke and Saw First Oval Game

Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor, of Green Street Green, Farnborough, Kent, are the oldest married couple in England, for Mrs. Taylor has just celebrated her 101st birthday. Her husband attained that age recently.

They have been married for 63 years, and are living now at an old-world cottage in the quaint little village a mile from Farnborough.

Mr. Taylor still reads his newspaper without artificial aid, greatly relishes his glass of ale, and an occasional cigar makes him feel young once more.

"I am a Cockney," he told me recently with some pride, "but Sophie comes from Thurston, in Suffolk. She is not as well as I am, I am afraid, for I never see a doctor from one year's end to another. I hate the men, because they try to make me feel old.

"I was born in 1824, and left Kennington Grammar School before I was twelve, when I took a job as a greengrocer's boy. In those days we all wore brown holland pinafores and funny little trousers, and we were whacked pretty hard sometimes, I can tell you.

"That part of my school life is still quite fresh in my memory.

"In those early days London was lit at night by foul-smelling oil lamps, and our night rest was disturbed by the cry of the old watchman, who was clock and weather prophet combined. The peelers, or policemen, as you call them now, always wore a top hat.

"I also remember seeing men in the stocks outside the vestry hall at Camberwell, and I used to collect all the bad apples I could find in my shop to throw at them, while I jeered with the rest.

MET THE "IRON DUKE."

"My father was a carpenter, and eventually I became apprenticed to the trade. Once I was working in Hyde Park on the Exhibition building which afterwards became the Crystal Palace. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert came along to see how we were getting on with the work, and I put a plank down for them to walk over the joists of the floor. We had to be very careful that they didn't fall down.

"On another day the old Duke of Wellington came along on horseback and shook hands with many of the workmen. I was very proud, because I was one of them.

"I have always been interested in plays, and I don't think there is a single Shakespearean play which I have not seen at one time or another.

"I also remember seeing the first cricket match at the Oval, when all the players wore the "chimney pot" silk hat.

"Those were great days, when it was hardly safe to travel about without some sort of arms. Most of the young gentry carried swords, and with the more hotheaded a duel was no unusual thing. It was unsafe for anyone to travel any distance without a gun of some sort. Even very close to London there were plenty of highway robbers, who thought nothing of attacking anyone who looked as though he had any money. Chalk Farm, which now, I believe is a mass of suburban houses, was only about fifty years ago a regular hotbed of highwaymen.

"We had some great times during the Parliamentary elections. I just remember the passing of the great Reform Bill in 1832. There was a general holiday on that day. Each village had its bonfires and dances all day long and for the best part of the night. The pothouses were crowded, and young and old had a glass or more of good ale.

"The general drink in those days was ale. Even young children were brought up on it, and at five years old a glass of small beer was put before us at dinner time."

NUDE BATHERS PLEAD SEA LURE

Girls Give Explanation But White-haired Man Unknown

"People who don't like to see bathers without costumes should look the other way."

This was the comment made by one of the two heroines who, according to a complaint made to the local authorities of Burnham-on-Sea by a resident, undressed in his garden and ran down to the sea in a state of nudity.

"We were out for a stroll," said the second young woman, "and the sea looked so alluring that we decided to bathe.

"The house standing in the garden in which we undressed was apparently uninhabited, and as the beach is very lonely at that spot we thought the absence of costumes would not matter.

"It was certainly embarrassing, however, when a crowd of children came along."

The old man with snow-white hair who, according to rumor, was also seen bathing in the nude, has not been traced, but it is suggested that in his case sheer absence of mind was responsible; in other words, he deemed it sufficient to go down to the beach "wrapped in thought."

TUDOR FIREPLACE FOUND IN KENT

On removing some panelling at Woodlands, Tenterden, Kent, an 18th century residence, builders found a Tudor fireplace.

It is constructed of Bethersden marble and is in excellent condition.

The fireplace is seven feet in height and eight feet and a-half in width. It weighs roughly a ton.

"DERBY OF THE DALES" IN LOVELY SETTING, ALTHOUGH CLOUDS SWATHED COURSE

Competitors Got Training Tending Sheep on the Fells Leaping Gates Instead of Opening Them

The sixtieth annual Grasmere sports was held in one of the world's loveliest settings, and if at times some of the competitors were swathed in cloud and Grasmere Lake was grey after rain, the polity and humor of this "Derby of the Dales" was scarcely impaired.

Picture a roped rectangular greensward enclosure, rimmed with old-fashioned stage coaches and up-to-date motor-coaches, all used as grandstands. Lord Lonsdale is holding the tape for the boys' Fell race, pole jumpers are soaring like swallows over the tall bar, four pairs of wrestlers in their white singlets and velvet trunks and socks of purple, or scarlet, or green, are heaving and straining, locked in a terrible embrace, while supporters mutter, "Hank him, Joe," or "What price that for a cross-buttock?" as one goes with flying legs and arms to the turf.

On the outskirts of the enclosure are fortune-telling gypsies with gaudy tents, a wandering violinist, bookmakers, luncheon tables laid with glistening glass and silver, and, a little farther away, 400 more motor-cars, some of them nestling under beautiful trees.

RACE IN THE CLOUDS.

The guides' race, perhaps the chief event of the day, and certainly the most adventurous, proved to be a race in the clouds. Shortly before the 24 competitors lined up in running costume and spiked boots, clouds drifted over the flags on the crest of Butter Crag and Castle Rock, 870 feet up, the turning point of the race. Off from the start, they went streaming through a gap in the crowd, up a steep sloping field wooded with firs, over a stone wall, 6 feet high, and—walking now—thigh deep in bracken, they were soon lost in the clouds, partly guessing, as Robinson, the winner, said afterwards, at their way in the mist.

Robinson, a farmer of 22, from Newby Bridge, won easily for the third year in succession, having led all the way, although he had a bandaged ankle from a sprain a fortnight ago that put him out of training.

There is a fine simplicity about these athletes of the dales. For the most part their work is their training. John Stables, of Broughton-in-Furness, aged 14, who won the juvenile guides's race in borrowed shoes, gets his training tending sheep. Similarly with the giant, Ernest Towers, of Lorton, who jumps like a stag and won both the running high leap and the pole leap. "Training," he laughed, "I get all mine leaping gates while tending my sheep on the fells." Towers never goes through a gate—he goes over it.

BATTLE OF GIANTS.

The semi-final of the heavy-weight wrestling was indeed a battle of giants. Douglas Clark, of Maryport, the international Rugby League player, captain of Huddersfield, a thickset Goliath, 14 stone and aged 33, met W. Knowles, of Bootle, a clean-limbed man of 6 feet 2 inches, but ten years his junior and an uncommonly squable young farmer, who wrestles almost as calmly as he drives his father's carts. Clark was felled with the inside click, a piece of neat but Herculean leg work. In the final W. Knowles threw J. W. Carr, of Kirkbride.

DOCTORS WATCH PIN PASS THROUGH BOY

Child Swallowed it and was Kept Without Food Two Days

For two days doctors at the Metropolitan Hospital, Kingsland road, E., watched, by the aid of the X-rays, a pin passing through a five-years-old boy's body.

Albert Smith, of 4 Watson place, Kingsland road, swallowed the pin which he was using as a toothpick, when he was left in the house alone. He went to a neighbor's house and told what had happened.

He was taken at once to the Metropolitan Hospital, where he was kept without food for two days, while the doctors watched the progress of the pin.

Then he was discharged cured and he went home to a big meal. If he had eaten anything after swallowing the pin, he might have pushed the point into the wall of his stomach and set up peritonitis.

TESTING CLOCK WITH NO HANDS

Figures Shown on Panel Replaces Old Methods in London

A new type of clock which has a square dial and no hands is being tested at London terminal stations. It has already been installed at "Metro" stations in Paris.

At Waterloo the novelty of a clock which tells the time simply by figures on two small panels instead of by hands pointing to the numerals on a round dial has drawn crowds.

As each minute passes, a new panel is let down automatically, and in the same way the hours are changed.

The clock, which is electrically driven, is controlled by a master clock of the ordinary type.

Mr. John Baer, who is interested in the experiments, said to a press representative: "It is much easier to read the figures than the hands at a distance, and for that reason the timepiece is eminently suited to railway stations. Another advantage is that the time appears on the new clock just as it does in the time-tables. Thus, at 12.30, all that you see is the figures "12.30."

BLACK POM LIVES WILD IN GRAVEYARD

Vicar Dispels Legend of Faithful Watcher Over Master's Grave

A black Pomeranian dog has for some years made his home among the tombs in the burial ground of Wortley Parish Church, Leeds.

A legend has grown around him that he is keeping vigil at his late master's tomb, whose funeral, the story goes, he attended. This touching story of dog devotion is not borne out by the Rev. Edward Wilcox, vicar of Wortley, whose vicarage adjoins the burial ground and who knows the dog quite well.

"I know that the dog makes his home in the burial ground," Mr. Wilcox told a reporter. "His lair is under a bush among the tombs. I am perfectly sure, however, that he is not there because of his devotion to a dead master or mistress.

"He was owned by people who once lived in the neighborhood, and when they left the dog stayed behind and made his home in the churchyard. People in the neighborhood said, 'Feed him,' but he will let no one approach him. He is quite wild.

"I have tried myself to make friends with him but without success. Some people take food to him in the churchyard. He seems to lead the life of a recluse, keeping quite to himself."

BOYHOOD ROMANCE HAS TARDY SEQUEL

Highlander Marries His Girl Sweetheart After Half Century

Boy and girl sweethearts who had not met for fifty years have been married at Crieff.

The bride, Mrs. Maggie M. Brown, a Glasgow widow, and the bridegroom, W. R. Somerville, first met at Stirling in 1875. At that time Mr. Somerville was serving in the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders. Later he went on foreign service, and after his discharge from the Army settled down in South Africa.

He decided to return to Scotland this year, and arrived at Glasgow on June 8. There he renewed his friendship with Mrs. Brown, and the romance quickly developed, the wedding taking place within a month.

HUSBAND HISSED AT WIFE'S FUNERAL

Women Make Demonstration for Half a Mile at Birkenhead

Disorderly and disgraceful scenes were witnessed at the funeral at Birkenhead of Elizabeth Vaughan and of her three children, whom she drowned in the Mersey. Three other children she threw in the water scrambled out. The woman had been arrested on a theft charge the previous day and let out on bail.

The funeral took place from the home of Mr. Vaughan's grandfather, at the north end of the town. A large crowd of people, mainly women, assembled, and when the procession moved off down Price street a demonstration was made against the carriage in which Mr. Vaughan was riding.

Hundreds of women endeavored to swarm round it, booing and hissing, and this was continued for half a mile, in spite of the efforts of many police.

When the carriages left the cemetery renewed demonstrations were made around the one in which Mr. Vaughan rode.

BURGLAR GOT REAL CURTAIN LECTURE

When a burglar entered the house of Miss Wayne and Miss Kelly at Clevedon, the two women were unalarmed, but told the man to sit down while they talked to him" for his own good."

The man listened earnestly and when he left told the women that he would not do such a thing again, and added: "Get a dog; someone might come in not so quietly as I did."

A report was not made to the police owing to the man's plea that he was destitute and could not obtain work.

BRIDE'S FALL PUTS END TO HONEYMOON

The unexpected opening of a motor-car door caused the postponement of a Cleadon couple's honeymoon.

After the wedding at the Wesleyan Church, the bride and bridegroom drove off in a car, intending to catch a train at Newcastle-on-Tyne for their honeymoon trip.

Before the car had gone many yards the door flew open, and the bride, Mrs. Gladys Quenet, was thrown violently into the roadway. Her shoulder was fractured, and a doctor ordered her removal to her father's home.

The honeymoon had thus to be abandoned.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

PROPER STANDARD OF HEALTH DEFINED.

What is health?

Is it the possession of the standard number of pounds of weight for a given age and height?

Is it present if the blood pressure record indicates the point it should for a man or woman of your age?

Is it guaranteed if the pulse rate and temperature are "normal?"

Do the color and condition of the skin prove the existence of health?

What is health?

There is no rule of thumb to determine whether you are or are not a healthy person. Science does accept certain standards. They are the averages found after the examination of a large number of persons.

The great life insurance companies appointed a committee to examine a half million policies and the circumstances relating to the policyholders. Ages at death, ages of those living, weights and heights, family histories—all the many facts relating to the physical history and habits of this great army were inquired into and made the basis for a remarkable report. Out of this grew tables of standards.

One thing you must not forget—if you do not measure up to these standards—if you are above or below height or weight—if your pulse rate varies, etc., etc.—you must not worry if you seem otherwise fairly normal.

The test of the pudding is in the eating and, after all, the best test of your degree of health is your ability to do a day's work without undue fatigue, to eat three good meals a day and to get up rested after a decent sleep.

It is not tremendously important to know your height, weight, pulse rate and temperature. What is "normal" for you, may be abnormal for me.

If your pulse is habitually slow or habitually fast; if your temperature is habitually low or habitually high—these facts mean little, provided you feel well and go cheerfully about your affairs, doing your work easily. The individual element tells the story better than any accepted "standard."

Of course, we have gone so far in our standardization that we are on pretty safe ground to accept the averages as essentially correct. But, if you happen to fall short of the average, you need not feel alarm and begin to picture just when your approaching end will arrive.

I have known many men and women who did not conform to the accepted standards, but who lived far beyond the "alloted time," the three-score years and ten. You need not worry because you are "abnormal."

By simple living, by observing the rules of hygiene, even with a frail foundation, you can realize the normal expectation of life.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.

Adverse figures again rule in the stellar forecast. Troublesome conditions are heralded for all new ventures and affairs generally may quite suddenly assume menacing aspects. It would be well to be safeguarded from fraud or trickery by means of papers or writings. While personal affairs may be less annoying, even these may exhibit strange features, since both the eccentric planets, Neptune and Uranus, are under solar aspect.

Those whose birthday it is should protect themselves from all kinds of trouble and deception during the year, by strict attention to detail and handling all manner of writings with precaution. Even social, domestic and romantic affiliations should be safeguarded from irregularities. A child born on this day is likely to be well favored with talents but may be subject to strange experiences in business as well as in its personal affairs. It should be well instructed in measures for its protection against deception and subtlety.

TELLS DYSPEPTICS WHAT TO EAT

Avoid Indigestion, Sour Acid Stomach, Heartburn, Gas on Stomach, Etc.

Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble, say medical authorities, are due nine times out of ten to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. Chronic "acid stomach" is exceedingly dangerous and sufferers should do either one of two things.

Either they can go on a limited and often disagreeable diet, avoiding foods that disagree with them, that irritate the stomach and lead to excess acid secretion or they can eat as they please in reason and make it a practice to counteract the effect of the harmful acid and prevent the formation of gas, sourness or premature fermentation by the use of a little Bisurated Magnesia at their meals.

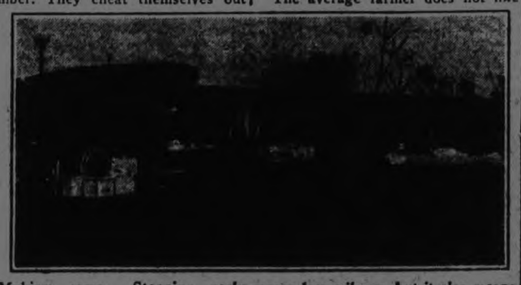
There is probably no better, safer or more reliable stomach antiacid than Bisurated Magnesia and it is widely used for this purpose. It has no direct action on the stomach and is not a digestent. But a teaspoonful of the powder or a couple of five grain tablets taken in a little water with the food will neutralize the excess acidity which may be present and prevent its further formation. This removes the whole cause of the trouble and the meal digests naturally and healthfully without need of pepsin pills or artificial digestents.

Get a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia from any reliable druggist. Ask for either powder or tablets. It never comes as a liquid, milk or citrate and in the bisurated form is not a laxative. Try this plan and eat what you want at your next meal and see if this isn't the best advice you ever had on "what to eat."

THE DISCOVERY OF AUTUMN.

Humanity loves to be fooled. If a sideshow man cannot be found to do the fooling the average run of humanity will try the easy road to mystery and accept any old bunk that may be at hand.

It is this old habit of accepting things without looking which makes some folks run for winter cover at the first sign of a cool day in September. They cheat themselves out of the finest season of the Canadian year, our wonderful Autumn.



Making camp. Stopping early means less mileage, but it also means a well made camp, with everybody settled before sundown.

About the time some people are figuring on putting the auto up for the winter, is just the time to begin looking her over and tuning her up for the autumn camping trip.

Oh(no, don't fool yourself; this is not one of those old time pork and beans trips where everyone was worn out and ready to sneak home at the end of the first week. Not much! The days of tough and rough going in the camping line are a thing of the past. That is the first pet old idea to discard, for camping comfort is here and here to stay.

The second pet old idea is the one about pork and beans. If out auto camping for more than three weeks, one mess of that food may be enjoyed towards the end, and if so, go to a store and purchase a can or two, but otherwise forget them.

Instead of digging up all the discomforts of old time camping, let us take a peep into the prospects of enjoying a week end in Autumn, or perhaps two weeks straight.

Little folks enjoy an autumn trip. The baby shown here started on a transcontinental camping trip at the age of one year and three months. He was happy and healthy and liked it.

First of all remember that an auto which has run all the summer long, may need a little tinkering. Look her over and save any possible trouble there.

Start out with the battery in good shape; then, if making long runs, burn your lights plenty. It is possible to use the headlights in camp every night, depending on the run to recharge the battery.

A good umbrella tent is the best. It is easily handled and cosy. Get one with the floor sewed in. Shed tents are not always satisfactory in nasty weather. Tent dressing is easily applied and is worth the money, for it gives added security against rain..

A tent fly, plus old jute sacking or any other old cloth, makes a dandy shelter under which to eat in rainy weather. The fly acts as a roof, the other material as walls to hold off the wind and rain. Oilcloth may be used also for a dustproof cover in dusty-going.

The average farmer does not like to have strangers making free and unrequested use of his property any more than a town dweller would like to have strangers tearing up the front lawn. Select a good spot as a camping site. If it belongs to a farmer go to his house in a business-like and friendly manner and sell him the idea of having you camp there. Offer to buy milk and corn if necessary for the table. The chances are he will be glad to have the business. Sometimes we offer to make a small payment, sometimes not.

After several extensive auto camping trips, and a transcontinental trip in the autumn, this is about how we would approach a farmer, for a camp site: "How do you do, Sir?" (smiling in a friendly way), "My name is So-and-so, from Blankville. We seek the privilege of camping near friendly folks, where we might perhaps obtain milk and such like at regular prices. We will not destroy anything and will leave the place just as we found it."

Those words are magic; they are the "open sesame"—they are sweet music to the farmer. Never in all our travels, did they fail to produce the hearty welcome. In many cases apple cider, cake and other farm joys were heaped upon us. It all sounds fishy, in these modern times, when farmers are supposed to be tight and mean—but go, try it yourself. That is where the discovery comes in.

It may be that the harvest safely garnered, and the clear warm sunshine makes farm folks happy and generous. Go try it.

Warm days, cool nights, well made beds with plenty of warm blankets, good food, fresh every day—that's the life. No flies to bother one. No ice to keep melting. Milk always cool—these are enough to make any wanderer peppy.

Unless you know the country, boil your drinking water. Drain your radiator at night. Carry a small spade and axe. Leave fire arms at home.

Stop about three o'clock and make camp, wash up and enjoy life. If you run until four your supper will be late and you will gain mileage at a foolish price. Try and idle along; it will give you a chance to discover the glory of Canada's Autumn, the joy of living as a part of it for a few days, and the possibility of doing it in finished comfort.

Briefly this is the gist of much experience in auto camping over a long time in all seasons. If your bed is uncomfortable, your tent leaky, your meals mostly from cans you are a back number. Select equipment with care and venture forth.

FAMOUS JEWELS

By Barbara Bayne

PEARLS WHICH HAVE BEDECKED FAMOUS WOMEN

The charm of the pearl has always fascinated the human mind. As ornaments, pearls were at the height of their fame during the Roman Empire. Nero and Caligula reveled in these gems.

And we know of the regal comedy, enacted when Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, to impress Caesar with her vast wealth, at a banquet given in his honor, dissolved her pearls in vinegar and drank the liquid from a golden goblet.

There are the Eglington black pearls, the property of an Englishwoman. This famous necklace, formerly in the possession of the Earls of Eglington, is composed of six magnificent black pearls, slightly graduated, each set in a cluster of diamonds and connected by chain-pattern links of brilliants.

Another famous necklace with pearls is the "Empress Josephine," composed of twelve antique sardonyxes engraved with classical subjects in intaglio; they are surrounded with brilliants and united to one another by scrolls of delicate goldwork, each set with a pearl. There are three magnificent pearl pendants.

In the Musee Cluny, in Paris, there is a wonderful pearl and sapphire cross which was found in Spain. It was identified as the cross that was attached as a pendant to the crown worn by the Gothic King, Reccessvinthus.

The "Tara" brooch, which is now the chief treasure of the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy in Dublin, was bought in 1867 and presented to the Academy. This famous brooch was found on the seashore near Bettystown, County Louth, and named the "Tara" after the celebrated hill of that name.

It is of white bronze, thickly gilded and made after the manner of a modern "stick" pin, with the expanded head and large ring divided into a number of panels; each panel is enriched with inlaid stones and enamels of cloisonne which, made separately, are mounted like gems.

The metal is hammered, chased, engraved and filligreed with extraordinary delicacy. A finely wrought chain is attached to one side of the brooch, and it is evident that a similar chain on the other side has been lost.

On the reverse side the spiral ornaments, known as the Celtic trumpet pattern, are executed with marvelous skill. It is this pattern which places the date of this extraordinary jewel in the tenth century.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

Betty Changes her Mind about Some Things.

When Gocomeback, the wee travel elfin found Betty Bly sitting on the steps of her porch looking gloomy, he had to laugh.

"One would think you had lost your last friend, Miss Betty," he said, sitting down on the step beside her. "What's wrong to-day?"

"Oh, Gocomeback," Betty cried, two big tell-tale tears creeping down her cheeks. "Uncle Johnny is coming to see us and Mama says he will have to sleep in my bed and I'll have to sleep on the couch in the diningroom. I don't like that at all. I don't want to give up my bed to anyone. I—"

"Gracious me!" laughed Gocomeback; "is that all that ails you? I thought by the expression on your face it was something worse than that. Why—if you could ever see the way—, but pshaw, while I am telling you, I can show you," and before Betty could ask any questions, she found herself standing before the queerest looking house she had ever seen. It looked like a very large tall pointed hat set up on a pole. The walls under it were all woven of reeds, plastered together with mud.

"Where in the world are we, and is that really a house?" Betty whispered.

"Sure it's a house," laughed Gocomeback, "and it holds a great big family in it, too. We are in the Southern part of Africa, the home of the Makalolo tribe. I just wanted you to see the way they take care of their guests."

"Is that Really a House?"

Gocomeback rapped at the low entrance and out popped several little black heads. When they saw Gocomeback, the queer little black youngsters crawled out to greet Gocomeback and Betty.

They invited Betty into their house and with much laughing she did as they did, crawled in on her hands and knees. But the house inside was dark and close so she was glad when they once more came out into the sunshine.

"More company," laughed the oldest little black girl. "Now I know we will have to sleep without a roof to-night," she told her younger sister.

"What does she mean, Gocomeback," whispered Betty.

"Just what she said," laugher Gocomeback. "When the people of the Makaloloo tribe have more company than their house will accommodate, they just lift that hat-shaped roof right off their house and set it over on the ground. Their guests must have a roof over their heads whether they do or not. Now to-night they have more company than they can fix up the house for so they will just lift the roof off and make a shelter for their guests. What shall we do—stay here all night or go home?"

"Let's go back to North America at once," whispered Betty and quick as a wink she was seated on her own porch step alone. The clock in the hall struck five and Betty jumped up and ran up stairs to change the sheets on her bed for Uncle Johnny.

"I'd much rather give up my bed than the roof of my house," she told her mamma and they had a good laugh over Betty's trip to Southern Africa.

BRADFORD LOOM AGAIN AS NEMESIS OF LACROSSE IN TRENT DISTRICT

Defeated Havelock-Norwood by 7-5 in Clean, Fast Semi-Final Game.

HALF-TIME, 5-2

Albert Armstrong's Work in Goal a Feature—Visiting Team Had Weight.

(By A Staff Reporter)

NORWOOD, Sept. 15.—Tom Bell and his Bradford intermediate lacrosse team returned to the Trent Valley district yesterday after an absence of four years and defeated the Havelock-Norwood combination at Norwood by the score of 7 goals to 5 in the first of home and home games in the semi-final round of the O.A.L.A.

It is something like four years ago since the old pillar of the game up around Bradford tumbled the towering hopes and ambitions of Dick Cole's Campbellford team, and in Monday's game they again loomed as the nemesis of Trent lacrosse. Mr. Bell is a banker and a sportsman with old memories of days when he lived in Campbellford. He led a party of 45 fans including fanettes, on the long motor trek to Norwood, and is confident that his team will push out into the finals with the winner of Wallaceburg vs Hamilton or Fergus, probably Hamilton as they won their first game with Fergus by 11-4.

Victors of a difficult group with Weston and Brampton, the latter last year's champions, Bradford's reputation and experience were enough to dismay the Havelock-Norwood team. Neither team was at full strength, but Bradford, including in their ranks several Aurora players, were a heavier outfit at both ends of the field. Their home, comprising "Suds" Sutherland, Reeves, Robinson and Harmon overshadowed the Havelock-Norwood youngsters such as Becky Jack, Harry Baker, Ketchen, Campney and others, who looked like the juniors they are against big Ozzie McKinstry and Harry Doonan of the Bradford defense.

And the visitors stepped out as one would expect of a group winner in early September; but on yesterdays' performance they do not rate as high as some other semi-finalists even the years since the war. It was a clean, interesting game, and did not bear exactingly upon Len Smith of Toronto, the referee, who was impartial and sufficiently strict.

The surprise of the game was the work of Harry Baker at inside home. This Norwood boy wasn't given much to do in previous games this year, but it was loaded on to him yesterday and he made good. Alex Weir and Scott also upheld the credit of the Norwood section and of the Havelock boys Doug Brennan and Albert Armstrong were the best. Armstrong in goal had a big day, and Brennan undertook a big effort all the way. Hooper and C. Brennan played well on the defense, but the team as a whole needed more physical strength and lacrosse experience in the scoring department.

The crowd exceeded 500.

The teams were:

Bradford — Goal, V. Hodgins; point, O. McKinstry; cover point, Harry Doonan; 1st defence, L. Church; 2nd defence, J. Billings; centre, Ed. Armstrong; 2nd defence, Kid Harmon; 1st defence, W. Sutherland; outside home, O. Robinson; inside home, W. Reeves; subs., Fred Collings and Harold Turan.

Time keepers—W. A. Pringle, Bradford; E. E. Lancaster, Havelock

Bradford Started Fast.

The home team emerged with the ball from the draw, but their first rather leisurely rush designed to feel out the visitors was broken up by Ozzie McKinstry, and Bradford flashed in on Albert Armstrong before his defense had got set. Armstrong blocked neatly but Robinson batted in the rebound. Kid Harmon made it two within a minute, in fact the very next rush from the face off, and it began to look like a farce. But the Havelock-Norwood defense quickly picked out their checks, stepped into high gear themselves and held Bradford on even terms for the rest of the long sultry afternoon.

Doug Brennan missed the net by a foot, and shortly afterward bounced the rubber over the top of the twine after Hooper had halted a Bradford rush. Becky Jack's shot was dead on but Hodgins scooped the ball out, and Weir, on the run, missed the rebound.

Armstrong stopped a hot one from Sutherland and a few minutes later Ed. Armstrong, although checked by Ketchen, fooled the Havelock goaler with a bounder, and before the period ended Harry Baker drove a long high one into the Bradford net, making the score 3-1 at the first breather.

Early in the second period L. Plunkett raised the hopes of the crowd by slipping one past Hodgins, but the Bradford home division got that one back in jazz time, Sutherland scoring on a combination with Reeves and Robinson. The Have-Nors were being outfooted and also outlucked at this stage. Reeves scored on a pass from Robinson over the net, but Robinson and Collings were turned back by Hooper and Charlie Brennan. Baker tried gamely to get inside the enemy territory, but failed to produce a goal. And so the play drifted fruitlessly to the half way rest with the score 5-2.

At the opening of the third period C. Brennan intercepted a play by Sutherland and Billings, and at the other end brother Doug waited an instant too long for a shot from inside but not out of reach of the defense. "Ab" Armstrong stopped several fast ones from Ed Armstrong and Robinson. All through this period the checking was the closest of the game, and after holding the Bradford crowd back for a long stretch, during which A. Armstrong did his best work, Reeves finally sifted through as the odd man for the visitors' sixth goal, which was raised to seven on a fast shot by Ed. Armstrong, a few minutes later, from beyond the defense.

The ball shifted up and down as the last session opened and after missing one shot, Doug Brennan bored through alone, drew out Hodgins and lobbed the ball into the net, falling in the act of shooting. After a clinch by Hooper and Sutherland which blew over in a moment Bradford started a delaying game, the whole team going down field and and arching around the Have-Nor defense. Stiff-necking might have put the damper on that pastime which was a form of ragging. Finally Harry Baker upset the game and raced the Bradford pack to their own area beating them and Hodgins by a hand-picked goal.

The home team continued their pressure, but easy chances were missed until Becky Jack scored on a pass from Doug Brennan just prior to the final gong.

The game was the cleanest ever played here, and injuries were few and light. Alex Kempt received an accidental tap on the nose while carrying the ball in the Bradford area, and retired for the rest of the afternoon with what appeared to be a fracture of the nasal bone. It was the result of the hazards of the game.

INSIDE Ggolf.

By CHESTER HORTON

Maker of 61 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans.

While too much tightness usually begins in the wrists and forearms, it is most easily noticeable in the upper arms and across the shoulders. One of the characteristics of rigidity in the golf swing is that it spreads with amazing rapidity—rigidity in the wrists will in the twinkling of an eye fairly paralyze for the moment the entire upper body. Tightness is a muscle stretched and drawn as you would stretch a rubber band, but rigidity is stiffness that takes all the spring from the muscles. Thus the best practice with the golf club is always to get free and easy in the address. Grip rather firmly with the thumb and forefinger of each hand, but keep the wrists and arms loose. Start with this freedom and the muscles will gradually 'wind up.' Start with them stiff and they quickly become rigid.

DODGERS FUTILE.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—Pittsburgh topped Brooklyn yesterday, 9 to 4, in the opener of a series, snapping a losing streak of four games which tagged the Pirates' disastrous western trip. The victory extended the Corsairs' lead over New York to six and one-half games. Cantrell was shelled out of the box in the second and was succeeded by Ehrhardt, whose wildness permitted the Pirates to sew up the game in the fifth with a two-run advantage. Five hits in the eighth gave Pittsburgh three more runs. Aldridge turned in his seventh consecutive victory. Score:

CHANNEL WINS CLOSE DECISION OVER EGYPTIAN

Abandons Attempt When 3 1-2 Miles From the Cliffs of Dover.

TIDE VICTOR.

Sea Was Calm and Everything Seemed to Favor Challenger.

DOVER, Eng., Sept. 15.—(United Press).—Helmy, the giant Egyptian swimmer, who set out from Cape Gris Nez at six o'clock Monday morning to swim to Dover, was sighted by a steamer at 4.30 p.m. eight and a half miles from the cliffs on the English shore, swimming strongly with conditions favorable to success.

At 3.45 p.m. Helmy was twenty kilometers north of Gris Nez, swimming easily, with a strong overarm stroke.

The trans-Atlantic liner Nieuw Amsterdam, standing up channel for Rotterdam, spied Helmy and his tug during the afternoon, whistled its salute while passengers cheered him.

This seemed to give the big Egyptian new enthusiasm, and he struck out courageously for the chalky cliffs of Dover, then plainly visible, but still a long way off—as a man swims.

Helmy at 7 o'clock last night was eight miles from the nearest land, and was still swimming strongly, although against the tide. This turns in another hour, and Helmy should reach shore at midnight if he holds out against the cold that hovers off shore in the evening hours. The sea is calm.

BOULOGNE, France, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—Tahir Helmy, the Egyptian swimmer, abandoned his attempt to swim the English Channel at 8.40 o'clock last night, when he was 8½ miles from Dover.

TRUE TO FORM

FOREST HILLS, N.Y., Sept. 15 (Canadian Press).—Form prevailed throughout in the national tennis championships on the grass courts of the West Side Tennis Club today, not a single upset piercing the placid atmosphere of the tournament. So true was the play to form that only four sets were lost by the fourteen United States and foreign seeded stars.

William T. Tilden II., of Philadelphia, the playing-through champion, had little trouble eliminating his fellow-townsman, Carl Fischer, despite the score of 9—7, 6—0, 7—5. Tilden toyed with his rival.

Howard O Kinsey of San Francisco, No. 4 on the national ranking list, was given a scare by Masonosuke Gukuda, of Japan, when the little Oriental took the first set at 6—4, but Kinsey came back to win the next three sets and the match.

Twelve foreigners started today's play and four dropped by the wayside. Max Decugis, captain of the French Davis Cup team, defaulted, Masonosuke Fukuda of Japan, and H. Ikaskai of Japan, were eliminated.

The Australian star, James O. Anderson, had little trouble in trimming A. W. Jones, of Providence, R.I., 6—1, 6—1, 6—3. William M. Johnston of San Francisco, favorite to reach the final round in the upper bracket, and Vincent Richards of Yonkers, N.Y., favored to reach the semi-finals in the lower bracket, each won their games today.

Jean Borotra, French Davis Cup star, took things easy in his match to defeat Clifford B. Marsh of Buffalo, 8—6, 6—4, 6—2.

QUEEN'S RUGBYISTS PUNT THE PIGSKIN

Nine Players Don Shock Uniforms Indulging in Light Practice.

KINGSTON, Ont., September 15.—Canadian Press. — Nine Rugbyists answered the call this afternoon when Coach W. P. Hughes called the first practice of Queen's football team at the Richardson stadium. Only light practice was indulged in, the players spending most of the time kicking the ball around and getting into trim for the season.

With Coach Hughes in command the players to turn out were Capt. "Red" Batstone, "Red" McKelvey, "Gib" McKelvey, Baldwin, Airth, Anglin, Hanford, Wright, and Hood of Hamilton. The latter, a husky middle wing, looked exceptionally good, and should be hard to keep off the senior squad.

"Peewee" Chantler, "Hank" Brown, Carl Voss, Lewis and Norris, are expected in to-night, and to-morrow's practice will likely see about twenty men on hand. "Liz" Walker is in the city, but was not out to-day. He will report to-morrow.

It was announced at Queen's that "Bub" Britton, star half back of Balmy Beach, O.R.F.U. champions last year, will be here probably to-morrow or Thursday. Britton has decided to enter Queen's, and his coming is welcomed at the University.

The new laws, which comes into operation next season, will cause endless arguments, so cut this out for reference. The laws on "offside" and the "throw-in" read:

Law 5.—When the ball is in touch, a player on the opposite side to that which played it out shall throw it in from the point on the touch-line where it left the field of play. The player throwing the ball must stand with both feet on the ground outside the touch-line facing the field of play, and shall throw the ball in over his head with both hands in any direction, and it shall be in play when thrown in. A goal shall not be scored from a throw-in, and the thrower shall not again play until the ball has been played by another player.

Law 6.—When a player plays the ball, any player of the same side who at such moment of playing is nearer to his opponents' goal-line is out of play, and may not touch the ball himself, nor in any way whatever interfere with an opponent, or with the play, until the ball has been again played, unless there are at such moment of playing at least two of his opponents nearer their own goal-line. A player is not out of play when the ball is kicked off from goal, when a corner-kick or a throw-in is taken, when the ball has been last played by an opponent, or when he himself is within his own half of the field of play at the moment the ball is played by any player of the same side.

Most of Old Machine Will Be Back With Good Crop of Rookies.

MONTREAL, September 15. — Canadian Press. — McGill University Rugby candidates start their pre-season activities to-morrow under the most favorable conditions that have fallen to the lot of the Red and White camp in the past four years. Coach Shaughnessy returns to-morrow to take command of the candidates, and when he rounds up his full contingent he will find, barring one or two possible exceptions, all but two of his squad of the previous year intact.

In the past Shaughnessy has been faced with the almost impossible task of building up a new machine after the squad from the previous year had been riddled by graduations. Last spring Dr. "Bones" Little and A. Moore, half back and snap back respectively, were the only two to graduate from college. Thus there will be available when the undergrads are back in harness almost 20 experienced players of the 1924 string including, on the line, Boyd Mune, Philpott and Gordie Hughes at outsides; Manson, Boucher, Pugh and Spears for middle and inside wing positions. Besides these front rank men, Woodruff and Walsh, two of the best wing men Shaughnessy had in 1923, will again be eligible.

In the backfield Ney Gordon is almost certain for flying wing, though he has a minor academic qualification to Hurdle, Eddie Hanna, Joe Cameron and Herbie Murphy are strain half back candidates, with Jack Mickles and Blair ready to alternate in the quarter position.

last year, and even the exacting Chairman of the committee, W. S. Merrill, professes himself satisfied by the success of the second annual show, even before it opens.

The poultry building will be crowded, Chairman George Paxman declares. More entries and better selection are the rule here too, and many new exhibitors are finding it worth while to show at Peterborough's Exhibition. An exhibit of ring necked pheasants obtained through the offices of W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., must be housed, it is feared, in a separate ten because of the congestion in the poultry building.

From other departments came similar reports last night—crowded buildings, bigger entries, better stock.

Final Details.

And so well has the work been done by the committees that last night there remained only a few details and a few duties to assign.

President Denne complimented E. F. Mason, Chairman of the Utilities Commission, on the efficiency and courtesy of his staff. Under Mr. Beatty the men have strung festoons of vari-colored lights over the paths and have installed the more serviceable lights where needed on the midway and in the buildings with the greatest goodwill.

Strip Tickets.

The strip tickets that were purchased at a special rate of four for a dollar may be used singly or as a strip at the convenience of the holder. With one of these strips a visitor may secure admission at the gate normally 35 cents; pass his car through to the parking place, gain admission to the grandstand, and still have one ticket left.

Children's Day.

Wednesday will be Children's Day, and all children will be admitted for five cents each in the forenoon and early afternoon. After four o'clock they must pay the regular rate. They will be admitted to the grand stand in the afternoon free, and the complete vaudeville programme will be given. In addition, there will be athletic events arranged for them and run off under the auspices of D. Loomis and G. Roper of the Y.M.C.A.

Reduced Rate.

On Wednesday evening, and at both performances on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, children will be charged only 10 cents for admission to the grand stand. In other years there has been no reduction from the adult price. The age limit is 12 years, and all over that must pay the full price.

Emergency Hospital.

There will be an emergency hospital on the grounds, provided by the Metropolitan Insurance Company, and a trained nurse will be in attendance throughout the Exhibition. This is a new institution which was highly approved by the Directors.

Special Events.

Some of the special events do not run throughout the Exhibition's five days. The dog show is only held on Friday and Saturday; Francois will present his wonderful exhibition only on Wednesday evening; the drawing contest is only held on Friday and Saturday; and the bands, except Al. Sweet's, will only perform on certain days. Persons showing dogs and holding passes will find them only good on the two days of the dog show.

There will be no vaudeville show or fireworks tonight. Al. Sweet and his Singing Band will present a special concert programme at the grand stand, assisted by the Caledonian Pipe Band, and the midway will be wide open.

DURLAND IMPRESSED BY NATURAL RESOURCES

Canadan Gen'l Electric President Says That Canada Has Made Wonderful Progress.

HALIFAX, Sept. 15.—D. C. Durland, president of the Canadian General Electric Company, on a recent visit here, completed a trip of inspection of the branches of the company throughout Canada.

As a result of this trip across the continent he was much impressed with the magnitude of the country's potential wealth in natural resources, particularly the magnificent water powers available for electric development wherein his chief interest lies.

Mr. Durland further stated: "Canada has made wonderful progress for a young country, but there are serious problems to be solved in unifying the provinces, developing a fiscal policy that will lead to better economic conditions, decreasing taxation and encouraging agricultural and manufacturing enterprises, all of which are fundamental to the necessary upbuilding of the country's population. However, there is undoubtedly a forward movement in business under way that is stimulated by the prospects of a favorable crop, which will greatly enhance the purchasing power of the agricultural districts and be reflected in the business of the entire country. Then again, the economic improvement in Europe and the generally better world conditions have decidedly increased the Canadian export business.

"The Canadian manufacturing conditions have not been very satisfactory but the electrical industry is in a relatively strong position with an assured future due to the constantly increasing use of electricity in industry and homes. This is resulting extensions to existing electric power plants as well as the development of water powers as yet unharnessed which create a growing demand for electrical machinery and appliances for the generation, distribution and utilizing of electric current."

NEW HASTINGS PETERBORO' RIDING

are, how they got there, and what kind of fellows are these unfamiliar neighbors.

Conservatives Wake First

The Conservatives were first to get their bearings and rustle out into the new political day. Last June they introduced each other at their first convention, and sent out Dr. Embury of Bancroft as their candidate in the election they anticipated. The Progressives will look each other over at Marmora next Saturday, where they meet in the town hall at 1 o'clock.

And as for the Liberals, they are stirring about, veterans of many a campaign in the ridings they knew to their remotest concession and school house, hearing rumors from supposedly influential outside sources that they are not expected to put a man in the field, and asking each other just what they, as survivors of the old political order and its traditions, are going to do about it.

And these Grits are so scattered, as indeed are their ancient and recent opponents, and means of communication are so difficult, that they have made but little headway until this last week. The Stirling Fair on Wednesday will bring some of them together, and it is understood that they will discuss their fortunes and their desires at an informal meeting which some of them have arranged. Whether or not the party will be represented in the contest, the most ardent of them hesitates to conjecture until they have canvassed their fellows from other sections; but several Liberals in a casual survey of the field as it is developing, regard their chance as good as either the Conservatives' or Progressives.

Call for John Dewart.

"I'd like to see John Dewart come out with us again," said one of the old Liberal leaders in East Peterboro. 'He made a good impression in the last election, and I believe he would measure up well against Dr. Embury and Arthur Brethen, that is if Mr. Brethen gets the Progressive nomination. It certainly goes hard with Liberals like myself, who believe in the party's ideals and who have been loyal to it through a lifetime, to feel that we should retire from political activity and bury ourselves. I speak only for myself, but I know others of the same sentiment, and our attitude at present is that we won't vote at all if we have no candidate. You feel as if you had been disfranchised, and I for one think we should stay in the fight and do the best we can. We'll know better where we stand perhaps before the week is over, and although the outlook is not bright, I've seen it worse."

RED AND WHITE STORE BANQUET

New System of Grocery Distribution Lauded—Reasons Are Shown.

SUCCESS REPORTED.

Representatives of the newly-organized group of Red and White grocery stores, inaugurated in this city about three weeks ago, were guests last evening of F. M. Sloan, president of the John Sloan Company of Toronto, the wholesale grocery firm to whose initiative the formation of this group of retail grocers is due. With a total of one hundred and forty members of the Red and White Stores in Ontario, there are 25 branches in this city and district, which were represented at the banquet last evening, at which about thirty-five people, including seven ladies, were present. The following members of the group wer represented Collins and Crowe, K. B. English, R. S. Goheen, W. J. Grady, J. Henderson, R. H. Howden, Jas. MacDonald, H. W. McMaster, J. Penrose, John Speer, F. S. White Company, A. Allison, Jas. Burgess, all of the city; C. C. Brown, South Dummer; F. W. Garbutt, Warkworth; L. E. Kelly and D. E. Scriver, Hastings; A. Leeson and Son, Havelock; Jas. Sidey, Bewdley, and C. P. Ralls, Cobourg.

The banquet was held in Hooper's Palm Room, and was catered to in Messrs. Hooper and Sons' usual excellent fashion. F. M. Brown, manager of the local branch of Sloan's, presided. Seated at the head table were other representatives of the company: F. M. Sloan of Toronto, president; L. Hurst, A. Johnson and M. T. West, all of Toronto; Allan Cameron and Hanlon Sisson, during the evening, Mr Johnson gave several loudly-encored vocal solos, with piano accompaniment by M. B. Chenhall.

Absolute Necessity

The president of the organization, F. M. Sloan, was introduced by Mr. Brown as "the discoverer of the Red and White Stores of Ontario," and gave a brief talk, in pleasant humorous style, on the system. Prior to the inauguration of the Red and White Stores in the province, the idea for which was gleaned by him from a similar attempt in Buffalo, he said he "realized the absolute necessity for wholesale grocers who wished to remain in business to work with the retailers." He considered this scheme "one better than the direct chain store, because each man is really running his own show." He could not see anything of real benefit to the retailer in the merger of wholesale houses, and thought there was more to be gained from direct attention to the selling, rather than to the buying end of the business. He gave some examples of the good resulting from the system in the increased business accruing to retailers up to date.

L. Hurst, of Toronto, auditor for the John Sloan Company, spoke of the huge overhead costs entailed in running a system of chain stores, such as one group with three hundred branches, who were compelled to employ a veritable army of checkers, supervisors and inventory crews to maintain a competent check on goods in the hands of their "hired servants." With the Red and White system, such supervision and overhead cost was unnecessary. "You are the owners of your establishments, and if you choose to use goods in your own homes, you are not defrauding anyone." Purchasing agents also were done away with and the frequent deliveries possible under this system made excess supplies and large cellar stocks unnecessary.

M. T. West, of Toronto, characterized the system as "one of the largest brotherhood movements ever started in this country," and considered it an exemplification of the Golden Rule.

Short speeches, showing in the majority of instances increased business accruing to members from the operation of the new system, were made by several members, including Miss M. J. Barnard, of the Porter S. White Company; W. J. Grady, F. W. Garbutt of Warkworth, L. E. Kelly of Hastings, C. P. Ralls of Cobourg, D. E. Scriver of Hastings, A. Leeson of Havelock, and A. Allison.

Some changes were suggested in the manner of advertising goods, particularly for the district members, and a good deal of discussion ensued on matters of interest to the group.

Allan Cameron spoke for a few minutes, thanking the members for their attendance, and announcing the holding of weekly meetings of the group, on Monday evenings, and the banquet broke up at a late hour with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Sloan, moved by R. S. Goheen and seconded by A. Allison and F. W. Garbutt of Warkworth.

COLONISTS IN WANT.

Jewish Settlers in Odessa District Lost Crops Through Drought.

MOSCOW, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—The Jewish colonists in the district of Odessa, who completely lost their crops this year owing to drought and other unfavorable conditions, are in a very precarious situation. Great quantities of seeds, a large number of cattle and considerable sums in cash are necessary to maintain the nine Jewish colonies there. A financial committee in Moscow has raised 15,000 rubles for the settlers.

DOMINION STORES' SIXTH ANNIVERSARY

Celebrating This Week Sixth Anniversary of Grocery Organization.

The growth of the Dominion Stores, which are celebrating their sixth anniversary this week, from a very small beginning to the position of Canada's largest retail grocery organization, is a commendable one.

AT THE CAPITOL

"ARE PARENTS PEOPLE?"

The feature picture at the Capitol Theatre for the first half of this week, "Are Parents People?" is one of those bright, gay productions that form a welcome interlude at times to heavier efforts of the screen. It has a light touch and a merry atmosphere that make it very entertaining. The cast is admirably chosen, and carries out the illusion of charming artificiality to perfection. Adolphe Menjou, who usually makes such a fine villain, giving a splendid version of the role of James Haslett, divorced from his wife (Florence Vidor) on account of various small disagreements in their domestic life. The efforts of their child, Lita, to bring the two together again form the basis of the question, "Are Parents People?" Betty Bronson makes a dainty little heroine, flitting through the picture with airy grace. She is expelled from school through an unfortunate mix-up that connects her with the infatuation of a room-mate for a movie actor, Horace Mansfield, and then, when her mother sends for her father and the two consult together, they quarrel again. Exasperated at her parents, the daughter decides to run away and goes to her friend, young Dr. Dacer, who is busy on an all-night case and does not return until the small hours of the morning. Discovered in his office next morning, Lita is promptly returned to her home by the scandalized young physician, but her wiles finally win him over and the ending spells romance for the two couples.

The light, bright photography of this production and the pretty gowns worn by the mother and daughter add immensely to its attractive screening.

AT THE GRAND

"THUMBS UP"

With Jimmy Goode back in the line and reinforcements in the persons of Percy Campbell and Stuart Callaghan added to the strength, the Originals in their new revue, "Thumbs Up," which opened a two nights' engagement at the Grand last evening, carried every objective. "Thumbs Up" proved the snappiest and most tuneful revue the Originals have given us. Bright as a new Canadian nickel, handsomely staged, spiced with plenty of fun, enlivened with some unusually clean cut dancing and with every performer happy in his choice of material and effective in putting it over, the 1925 revue which is produced by Leonard Young and Alan Murray, was a source of continuous enjoyment to last night's audience. The singing of the company whether in solos, the Originals' quartette, or in ensemble work, was more pleasing than ever before, and these entertainers, it must be remembered, had set a high standard in the past.

Gene Pearson scores the greatest triumph of his career in "Thumbs Up." This clever impersonator in a wealth of lavish costumes has been wisely given an opportunity to display his wonderful ability as a singer and every number last night was a gem. Mr. Pearson sang "I Want Someone to Love Me," "Love Has Come Into My Head," the old favorite 'Love's Old Sweet Song," and the Waltz Song from Romeo and Juliet scoring a tremendous hit.

The chief fun was supplied by that inimitable pair, Bob Anderson and Jimmy Goode. Anderson was never better than in the present production and he was irresistibly funny, whether as the pessimistic Tommy in the war skit, as the amusing Mrs. Bunk in a satire on society, or as the merry old King in the final sketch. His song "Could Lloyd George Do It?" was a scream, and his Bridesmaid's number in the second act as delicious a piece of burlesque as has been seen here.

As for Jimmy Goode, this blackface comedian proved as choice as usual, distributing a new lot of "wise cracks" in the same old deliberate way that never fails to make a hit. Jimmy made his debut last night as a "One Man Band," and it was a great start to a fine performance. Original fans were glad to see him back in the burnt cork again.

The Originals' Quartette—Bertram Langley, Jerry Brayford, Tom Dunn and Percy Campbell—were deservedly given a prominent place on the programme and never were heard to better advantage.

Alan Murray was of big assistance in his solo, "Some Night, Some Waltz, Some Girl," and in the various skits. Thomas Dunn's splendid baritone was effectively displayed in his dramatic version of "The Scapegrace," and Lionel Broadway scored in "What Happens After the Ball." The ensemble singing and dancing in the "Collegiate," and 'Starligh: Maiden" numbers were decidedly impressive. David Fonger contributed the "Raymond" overture as a xylophone solo and had to respond to an encore.

Stuart Callagahan, the new impersonator with the company, proved to be a find, and was especially effective in his dancing, particularly in the finale of the last act.

Two most amusing skits rounded out the programme, one a short war comedy in which Bob Anderson was the leading light and the other, a clever society farce that was about the best thing of the kind the Originals have offered.

All in all "Thumbs Up" is a feast of good things, and in its engagement tonight should be greeted with a capacity audience.—F. D. C.

GENE PEARSON, the Boy, with the bird voice with The Originals in their latest new revue, "THUMBS UP," at the Grand to-night.

COMING TO THE GRAND.

What the amusement loving public want nowadays is something new and novel in the way of entertainment. They demand plays replete with thrilling situations, heart interest and plenty of comedy. The famous Young-Adams Stock Company have succeeded in securing the leading New York successes, a list of plays never before produced by a stock company, and packed houses everywhere proves the merit of this standard attraction.

H. Wilmot Young and Margie Adams need no introduction to the theatregoers of Peterboro. The company is unusually large, consisting of 20 people and 7 big vaudeville acts. The engagement starts Thursday, Sept. 17th and finishes Wednesday, September 23rd. That big play with a punch "The Road To Ruin" will be seen the opening night.

AT THE ROYAL.

JACK LONDON STORY, "WHITE FANG," WITH STRONGHEART THE DOG, AT THE ROYAL ON THURSDAY.

Dynamic, dripping Drama with all the force of Jack London's genius behind it, passing across a panorama of some of the most beautiful scenic snow shots that have ever been seen on the screen! That, in part, is "White Fang," the Jane Murfin — Lawrence Trimble production of the famous dog story with 'Strongheart' in the title role. Even the ferocious, starved, blood-hunting Wolf Pack which circles and circles so swiftly and stealthily through the lives and deaths of the wanderers on the snowy wastes of Alaska has been actually reproduced—and not alone in long, fleeting shots. The battle between a trapper whose last cartridge is gone and the hungry wolves is given in close-ups! The stirring rescue of the stricken hero; the fight between the dogs; the battle over the gold, the parting and the reuniting of 'Strongheart' and Weedon Scott, all are faithful to the spirit of the great London. Ruth Dwyer makes a charming heroine, and Theodore Von Tlitz plays the role of Scott with conviction and skill. Mathew Betz is his usual excellent and heartily hated self as the villain. "White Fang" which comes to the Royal Theatre on Thursday, for a three-day run, is one picture that has been made from a great novel without in the least destroying the vivid reality of the original. Indeed, London, if he were alive to-day, could not but endorse the brilliance of this reproduction of his work.

"LADY ROBINHOOD" GOOD ADVENTURE FILM.

Invading fields of romantic and picturesque drama in the role of a sort of Spanish Joan of Arc, Evelyn Brent displays her real gift for brilliam character interpretation, and sweeps her audience along with her in a corking story entitled, "Lady Robinhood," which was shown for the first time locally on the screen of the Royal Theatre yesterday.

"Lady Robinhood" is a distinct departure from the crook melodrama like "Silk Stocking Sal," "Midnight Molly," and "Alias Mary Flynn," but Miss Brent's versatility is such that she adapts herself equally well to underworld roles or to the more heroic proportions of a girl who leads a band of patriot "Carbonari" in the Pyranees mountains against the aggressions of a local ruler who has flagrantly abused the common people to enhance his own wealth.

A young American millionaire, cruising on his yacht into the harbor of Manzilla, at the foot of the Pyranees, is kidnapped and held for ransom at the instigation of this lovable little firebrand, who then is foolish enough to fall in love with him and let herself in for many difficulties and complications. The story has been well worked out by Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins, and Tom Hopkins is responsible for the continuity.

"Lady Robinhood" is a remarkable picture in many ways, not the least of which is the driving power of a story which is logical, convincing and colorful to a degree.

WESTERN VAUDEVILLE ACT AT THE ROYAL.

Two real Westerners are an added attraction at the Royal until Wednesday night. "Alaska Jack" and his wife, "Princess Prairie Flower," are on a transcontinental auto tour, earning their way by working in theatres along the route, and their offering is well worth seeing. Opening with rope spinning and the different methods of tying cattle, some clever fire-eating, some iron jaw 'stuff,' such as bending a heavy steel bar in his teeth with a heavy man on each end of the bar; breaking a stone on his chest with a 25-pound sledge hammer—it's all out of the ordinary and a worthy addition to the rest of the programme, which is all up to the high standard maintained by the Royal.

WORKING HARD AT FAIR GROUND

Last Minute Touches Are Being Added at Stalls and Tents.

MIDWAY IS READY.

A tour of inspection through the various buildings at the Exhibition Grounds this afternoon, disclosed a scene of feverish activity. Exhibits of all kinds were being brought in and unloaded. Last minute touches were being given to the stalls, all the tents in the Midway and in other parts of the grounds are now placed in position. The tent which is to house the dog show is well equipped with clean, newly made benches, which very soon will be occupied by the best pedigreed canines in the city and district. The cages in the poultry tent are all in readiness for the show, and in an aojoining tent is a cageful of English ring-necked pheasants, brought to the Fair through the influence of W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., who prevailed on the Provincial Minister to sanction their appearance at the Fair. These birds are hatched mostly on private estates in the old country and are always a valuable addition to the attractions of game preserves.

The refreshment and lunch tents were already in working order for the benefit of the many whose duties called them at the grounds today, and a pleasing odor of cooking food was wafted down Leary avenue.

An exhibit, which, it is safe to predict, will captivate the youngsters, is a large black bear tied to a post at the south end of Main road.

All the mechanical amusement devices were carefully tested this afternoon.

Several of the executive members of the committees were on duty practically all afternoon, and everything promises to be ready for the opening.

OBITUARY.

Russel Frank, the six months old child of Mr. and Mrs. George Blodgett, 213 Antrim street, died this morning at 1 o'clock.

The funeral will take place at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

KATHERINE COURTNEY.

The death occurred on September 10th, at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Lorne Wilkie, of Katherine Courtney, at the age of 74 years, after six months illness.

Deceased was born in Warwickshire, England, and had resided many years in East Peterborough, previous to moving to Windsor 34 years ago. She was a Methodist in religion, and a most affectionate mother, leaving one son, Mr. E. N. Courtney, and two daughters, Mrs. Lorne Wilkie, and Mrs. Ed. Losing, all of Windsor. Her husband, Mr. Frank Courtney, predeceased her seven years ago.

HUGH McROULL.

The death occurred at the family residence, 699 Elgoose Crescent, on Monday, September 14, of Hugh McRoull, after an illness of several months. The deceased was born in Scugog in 1872. He had lived in Peterborough for about five years, coming here from Smith Township, where he had been engaged in farming. He was a member of George street United Church.

There remain to mourn his loss his sorrowing wife, one son Donald at home, and two brothers, James of Port Perry and George of Peterborough.

The funeral will be held from the family residence on Wednesday at 2.30 p.m. The Rev. Mr. Todd will officiate and interment will be in Little Lake cemetery.

SNOWDEN ECOBICHON.

Snowden W. Ecobichon passed away at 1.40 p.m. Sept. 14, at St. Joseph's Hospital, after a lingering illness, in his 23rd year.

He leaves to mourn his loss his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Ecobichon, three brothers, Percy of Cleveland, Winter and Rodney of Peterborough, four sisters, Dorothy, Sybil, Gladys and Elsie, all of Peterborough.

Snowden Ecobichon was well known as one of Peterborough's promising young athletes, and, up to his departure a few years ago for Cleveland, was to be found in every athletic meet in the city. He was especially prominent in basketball.

The funeral will be held from the family residence, 702 Aylmer street, Thursday, Sept. 17th. The service, at 2.00 p.m., will be conducted by Rev. Dr. Blagrove. Interment will be made at Little Lake cemetery.

TROTSKY FORESEES REVOLUTION ERA

Writes Book, "Whither England?" Telling What He Infers From His Studies.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—Leon Trotsky has written a book which he calls "Whither England?"—an American edition of which is being issued. Trotsky has supplied a special "Preface for America." The inference to which he asserts he is led by his studies is that England is heading rapidly towards an era of great revolutionary upheavals.

Uncle Tom Has Gun and Slave Girl. Lacks Clothes In Jazzy English Version Of Uncle Tom's Cabin

COVENTRY, England, Sept. 15. — (United Press). — Simon Legree, the whip-wielding slave driver who provided the unwholesome contrast for little Eva's sweetness and charity in the immortal "Uncle Tom's Cabin," finally got what has been coming to him all these years.

A jazzy stage version of Harriet Beecher Stowe's novel was performed on Monday night before the biggest audience that has appeared at the local Hippodrome in years. There were snappy song and dance numbers. Little Eva was as sweet and frail as ever. Legree was no less a vile demon in human form than when played under canvas by itinerant artists in the United States. But Legree met a new Uncle Tom. When the overseer became too cruel and overbearing, Uncle Tom hauled out an automatic and shot him, thus bringing to an end a long and disgraceful career.

The fact that the stage censor had objected to some of the costumes of the show indicates what time has done to poor old Uncle Tom and his friends and enemies. A last minute change of opinion enabled the censor to grant a license so that the slave girl star of the cast was able to read her lines and dance her numbers in as scanty a costume as she wished.

Sharp Reversal Of Form In Wall Street Market

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press.)—Stock prices in Wall street displayed a sharp reversal of form to-day, an early outburst of strength being followed by a sharp reaction which brought many issues down 2 to 3 points. The selling, which originated with professional bear traders and eventually encompassed a large amount of profit-taking, was associated with circulation of reports that legislation to restrict percentage of funds which banks would be permitted to loan on stock and bond collateral. Recent sustained advance in many issues had left the market in a weakened technical condition which facilitated bear operations.

Active Trading and General Advance In Mine Prices

TORONTO, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—With 181,805 shares traded in this morning, the Standard Mining Exchange was active. Argonaut, under heavy sales, advanced two points to 26¼, while Castle Trethewey also sold two points higher at 110. Dome Mines was twenty cents lower at 15.25, and Premier ten points higher at 250. Keeley, Nipissing and Vipond Con. each advanced five points to 155, 480 and 110 respectively.

Strong Tone Maintained In Stocks In Toronto

TORONTO, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press).—A generally strong tone was well maintained on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning, with the market more active. Brazilian, in dealings of more than sixteen hundred shares, advanced one-eighth at 72 5-8, and F. N. Burt, the second most active, climbed a point and a quarter at 62 3-4. Barcelona suffered a recession from its newly gained level, dropping three-quarters at 23¼.

New Setback In Wheat On Reports From Canada

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—(Canadian Press). — Reports that Canadian wheat is pressing for sale at the seaboard had an early bearish effect on wheat prices to-day. Besides, Liverpool quotations failed to respond to yesterday's upturn in values on this side of the Atlantic. There were denials, too, that frost was threatening damage to crops in Argentine, and it was contended that the critical time for Argentine frost is the middle of November. Opening prices unchanged to 1¼c lower, December 148 3-8 to 148 3-4, and May 151¼ to 151 5-8, were followed by moderate rallies but then by new setbacks.

COUNT AT GATE HONESTLY MADE

Figures of Exhibition Attendance Are Not "Boosted"—Paid Admissions Count.

30,000 WANTED

Thirty thousand!

Peterborough Exhibition Board does not cheat or this number might have been passed—on paper—long ago.

The count that is made public as representing the attendance at Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is the actual number that passed through the turnstiles after paying admission.

To-night's attendance does not count. Persons entering on passes do not swell the number. Only paid admissions appear in the total.

If Peterborough's Exhibition counted—as it is said some other Exhibitions do —every time an exhibitor entered on his pass, every time a director entered on business, and every time a boy drove in a new car or carried in a sheaf of wheat, why the figures would rival those of the Canadian National.

BUT PAID ADMISSIONS COUNT.

That's why, if the number is go over 30,000 you must attend on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The turnstiles must click thirty thousand times in four days. They automatically register the number just as a car speedometer registers the mileage travelled. The count is made in a locked box.

Last year the total was 27,000. Make it thirty thousand this week.

PROGRESSIVES IN EAST RIDING DISCARD CLASS RESTRICTIONS FOR THEIR MARMORA CONVENTON

Invite the Support of All Electors to Whom Their Ideals Appeal.

TO NAME CANDIDATE.

G. A. Brethen, M.P., Hopes For Liberal Aid, But No "Agreements" Made.

"Every elector, man or woman of independent thought and action, is cordially invited to attend, and will be given a voice and vote in all the business of the meeting, includisg the selection of the candidate."

This invitation in the announcement of the "Progressive Mass Meeting of the electors of the Federal Constituency of Hastings-Peterboro" which is to be held at Marmora, on Saturday, September 19th, at 1 p.m., strikingly emphasizes the change, and many will say the development, the Progressive party has undergone.

Its doors have been opened to everybody, its tylers have been withdrawn; no more will the press be excluded, no more will doubly-directed and authorized delegates, rooted firmly in the soil through their commissions from farmers' clubs and township organizations alone decide the party's standard bearer. The old ways and forms of exclusiveness, even the idea of it, have been discarded. Drury's broadening out has been substituted for Morrison's contraction and restrictions. That aggressive agrarian class consciousness which flared up a few years ago appears, in this district at any rate, to have receded to a desire for brotherindependents of other classes. In the independents of other classes. n the West there may still be no dilution of the distinctive spirit of the Progressive Party, but in Ontario, as Mr. Morrison himself announced, the provincial body is out of politics, leaving local political action to the discretion and devices of county organizations.

And casting about their vast new riding of probably 6,000 square miles in extent, the Progressive leaders in the Peterboro-Hastings sections, have decided to retain their name while abandoning their original identity. It was not an unanimous step. Some of the comrades of successful campaigns held out for the old methods of nomination by delegates, adopting and stiffening and hedging more stoutly the plan borrowed from the Conservatives, but in the end the walls have been levelled, as the posters proclaim, and there will be no exceptions when the convention's voice is heard.

G. A. Brethen, M. P., of Norwood, East Peterboro's last Federal representative, will submit his political future to the will of the Marmora meeting next Saturday.

"I intend to be present," he told the Examiner, "just as a member of the Progressive party. As to whether or not I'll be a candidate in the new riding I don't know more than anyone else, but I am doing nothing to influence that convention; I am ready to trust the people and I am satisfied to leave the Progressive choice to this meeting. Just as our bills say, everybody will be welcome. We are about to organize the con-

Poultry Exhibit So Good Visitors May Be Crowded

George Paxman was up to his neck in work last night, arranging the poultry exhibits at the Fair Grounds, but he had time to stop and declare something had to be done about giving the hens and ducks room to spread their wings. At 9 o'clock he had already placed a row of coops down the centre of both aisles, and was contemplating a third row on top of the already three-decked rows in the centre. It was questionable whether the fowl would leave room for visitors.

The classes are all well filled, there being one with 43 entries, and the poultry committee is enthusiastic. The birds are of an unusually high grade, and there are ducks and geese in numbers never before touched.

CHINA TO BE THE GREAT NATION OF INDUSTRY

Acting Premier, Dr. Wang, Says That Industrialism Will Sweep Country.

PEACEFUL CHANGE.

Shift in Population Will Help to Make Change in Labor Easy.

By Randall Gould
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(Copyright 1925 by United Press).

PEKING, Sept. 16. — China is destined to become the great industrial nation of the world, Dr. O. T. Wang, former Foreign Minister and Acting Premier, told the United Press in an exclusive interview.

"Industrialism has thus far affected only a few seaports, but it must sweep the country within a comparatively short time," he said. "China is a country ideally suited for the growth of industrialism and whether one welcomes such a development or not, it must be anticipated and dealt with intelligently.

"The industrial revolution in China, if wisely directed by her leaders, will be peaceful. Clashes between industrialists and hand workers could thus be minimized, if not entirely avoided."

Dr. Wang, who is known as the leading spokesman for the Liberal elements of China, suggested that eventually there must be a shifting in population, and he pointed out out Manchuria alone could care for 40,000,000 people. Such a readjustment as he envisaged, coming in conjunction with industrialism, would help make the translation easy, he held. Dr. Wang said that the new industrial growth in China would not make her self-sufficient, but would help increase the world's productivity and raise China's buying power so she could absorb more of the goods of other nations such as the motor cars and rolling stock of America.

He added that granting of tariff autonomy to China by the powers would be profitable to them in the long run, while it would also have the merits of being a just move.

The Midway

A blare of noise—the constant singing of the ballyhoo men running through it like the undertone to a symphony — a symphony of the jazz age—fat ladies—fat men—and more fat ladies—where do they all come from?—a babel of tongues—a kaleidoscope of changing colors that cause the eyes to close involuntarily in pain—"have the little lady's fortune told" (the little lady in question weighs 200)—take a baby home for a dime" (we watched the wheel spin six times and the baby seemed very reluctant to leave the stand)—wienies and hamburger — orangeade and root beer—and weird-looking drinks—the mingling of scents peculiar to no other place—"want mustard on your hot dog, lady?"—a dizzy swoop to the bottom of the steepest ride—a rush of people with rather stomachy smiles, trying to kid themselves into believing they liked it—the long dark tunnel of the caterpillar—a blending of two silhouettes into one—the sibilant soun' of a kiss—the sharp smack of a slap—"See the daredevils risk their lives on their machines every fifteen minutes for two bits"—"Oh, the gentleman win the basket of fruit—no he does not—the arrow moved"—the band playing "The Glowworm" while the burly saxophonist playing "Rigoletto," vainly tries to discover where's he's off — "Nine balls for a dime; try your luck!"—Lady Luck must have been visiting for most of them—"Min, the seats on that last ride didn't have no springs; I feel kinda lame'—sticky candy —stickier children—"Mamma, I want to ride the little pony and the chuchu train, whoopee, yow!"—"Mister, my hat blew off, and I can't go home without it. Can I go in and get it, can I, Mister?"—"See the only man living without a skull" — "That's nothing. I know a lot living without any brains" — girls in pairs and trios—smiling hopefully — waiting for some nice kind man to take them on the rides—and above all, the confusion of sound and scent—and a sense of people trying to enjoy themselves, and vainly wondering what it's all about.

CABINET STANDS BEHIND CAILLAUX

Will Stand or Fall on Result of Debt Negotiations.

MINISTER ON WAY.

PARIS, September 16. — Canadian Press. — Finance Minister Caillaux left for the United States upon his debt founding mission this afternoon. He took the boat train for Havre at 3.35 p.m.

Simultaneously with his departure it was declared in authoritative quarters that Premier Painleve and his cabinet were determined to stand or fall upon the result of the Washington negotiations. They were quite conscious of that hazard, it was stated, when they voted yesterday to give M. Caillaux full powers to negotiate.

BOY FOUND DEAD ON ROAD BESIDE BROKEN BICYCLE

Tracks Indicated That He Had Been Struck Down By Automobile.

CAR DIDN'T STOP.

Boy's Neck Broken and Skull Fractured—Police Looking For Driver.

CORNWALL, Ont., Sept. 16. — (Canadian Press).—The body of James Hayes, 16, was found on the Provincial highway near town last evening. His broken bicycle was found near him and tracks of an automobile indicated that he had been struck by a car which had failed to stop. The boy's neck was broken and his skull fractured. The police in neighboring towns are on the lookout for the car. The boy was returning from town, where he was employed as a grocer's assistant. An inquest will be held.

PRINCE LEFT CHILE.

Was Given a Cordial Farewell As He Started For Buenos Aires.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The Prince of Wales left Vina Delmar on a special train for Buenos Aires at 1.55 o'clock Tuesday morning. He was given a cordial farewell.

TO THE CITIZENS OF PETERBORO'

I WAS GLAD to read Honorable G. N. Gordon's statement, endorsing the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition, and recognize honor and thanks are due President Denne and his splendid Board of Directors and workers.

THE GROUNDS were open for inspection last evening, and I was glad to see so many out, although the weather was unsettled. My visit last evening gave an opportunity of inspecting the various tents and buildings which go to make an Exhibition, and I was pleased to see the grounds well covered, to a greater extent than ever before. I was also pleased with the clean and neat appearance of everything, as it not infrequently happens things get shabby after months of travel—all on exhibition at the Peterborough Industrial Fair is clean and neat, something that reflects credit on all connected with the work.

THE EXHIBITION IS ON, and we must get behind the Directors and patronize it, going as many times as possible —irrespective of the weather, for they have the same expense, rain or shine, and need support more in uncertain weather than in fine.

The Exhibition is ours—Let us get behind it—Put it over big—Everyone boost—Everyone go, not once but as often as possible.

J. J. TURNER, Mayor.

IMPORT WELSH COAL TO STATES

New York Dealer Says That 50,000 Tons a Month Can Be Obtained.

STRIKE WON'T LAST.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Arrangements will be made to import 50,000 tons of Welsh coal per month if the anthracite strike continues to the end of September, Sanders A. Wortheim, a prominent coal dealer, announced today prior to sailing for England.

Adequate supplies of steam coal and bituminous are on haud for the normal domestic commerial needs of th country, he said, "so there is no danger of freezing." Mr. Wortheim said he did not expect the strike to continue much longer, but that prices inevitably would be raised unless some importations were received.

SUICIDE FOUND.

Body of Well Dressed Man Is Discovered on Deck of Steamer.

DETROIT, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The well-dressed body of a man, about 30 years of age, a bullet hole through his head, was found on the gallery deck of the steamer Greater Buffalo shortly before it docked here from Buffalo yesterday. The police believe the man took his own life. Every effort had been taken to prevent identification of the body.

TWO MENTIONED TO OPPOSE KING

J. A. Armstrong and T. H. Lennox Are Named as Possible Candidates

CONVENTION TO-DAY.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The nomination of a candidate to oppose the Right Hon. Mackenzie King in the constituency of North York is the chief business before the convention of the Conservative Association of that riding this afternoon. Among the names before the convention in this connection are those of J. A. Armstrong, former member for the constituency, and T. Herbert Lennox, member for North York in the Ontario Legislature.

CHILDREN DON'T MIND WEATHER

Everything Ready For Today's Fair—Youngsters Flock to Grounds.

BIRD'S EYE VIEW.

Lacking only a flood of sunshine to insure a record-smashing Exhibition, the directors and their assistants and a small army of midway concessionaires and exhibitors, bustled about this morning adding finishing touches to the bright and extensive plant and equipment that seemed complete in every detail.

Race horses were working out leisurely on the track, and on its grassy enclosure flocks of sheep, cleaned and trimmed for the show ring, grazed as contentedly as in their home pastures. Workmen were sweeping out the grandstand, caretakers were setting up their apparatus on the vaudeville stand, the poultry tent was clamorous and the flower department hushed. The Midway was tuning up with Johnson's "I Wonder What's Become of Sally." Fred Bullied was broadcasting a beast to the effect that the Michigan State Fair at Detroit last week was not in the same class with Peterboro's, the dinner tents were stocking up, and the midway was idling except for oiling the whip, the ferris wheel and other amusement devices, and directors when they met each other scanned the sky for a gleam of the silver lining of the threatening clouds.

By eleven o'clock President Denne's optimism was bolstered by the hopeful weather forecasts of Reg Turner, John Gillespie, Tom Meleadoo and William Steinkrauss who unanimously agreed that it wasn't "going to no more."

Meanwhile Tom Brown set up the turnstiles to register the afternoon's attendance of adults.

And Then Sunshine!

Noon time brought a splash of sunshine, and, although the rain hazard had not entirely vanished, the gay colors that decked the expansive Park flashed their full brilliance in the burst of light.

CANADA CANNOT SIGN PROTOCOL

Position Makes it Impossible For Her to Ratify Convention.

STILL INTERESTED.

By Henry Wood
(United Press Staff Correspondent).

GENEVA, Sept. 16—Canada made it clear before the League of Nations Assembly to-day that she hesitated to accept any obligations which might force her automatically to intervene in a new war.

Her representative, Bostock, declared that while Canada approved the general principals of the Geneva protocol, her secular geographical position made it impossible for her to ratify this convention. Canada, he said, realized more and more since the war what it cost her, and hence she hesitated at new obligations, which might mean new intervention.

He emphasized, however, that Canada's interest in all efforts for world peace were unaltered.

Elodora Yanez of Chile introduced two resolutions, one demanding that the League convoke an international peace conference aimed at stimulating the peace conference of the world, and another seeking a gathering of primary instructors so they could start a world wide of "moral disarmament" among the young.

In the early moving pictures some of the scantiest scenes on the films were cut out.

CONFER ABOUT MAKING ARMS

League Committee Asks For Conference on Private Manufacture.

WELL SUPPORTED.

GENEVA, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—An international conference on the private manufacture of arms during the coming year has become a practical certainty through the unanimous adoption last evening by the sub-commission of a resolution of Senor Guerrera of San Salvador, asking the Assembly to instruct the Council to prepare plans immediately for such a meeting.

Britain, France, Italy, Japan and Spain whole-heartedly supported the resolution, thus insuring its adoption by the Assembly.

CANADA BUTTER NOT REGULAR IN QUALITY

Fault Lies With Butter, Not With Transport Difficulties.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—Lack of fidelity to quality was the trouble with the export of Canadian dairy products and not transportation difficulties, was the statement of Sir Joseph Flavelle to members of the Ontario Agricultural committee, who met at Parliament Buildings yesterday to consider the betterment of export to the British Isles.

R. M. Player, of Walkerton, creamery representative, said that he had found on visits to Great Britain that is was true that Canadian butter was "irregular in quality", when tested with other butters.

STOCK CLASSES ARE ALL FILLED

Entries at Exhibition Equal to or Better Than Last Year.

Wesley Fallis, chairman of the committee on sheep and swine, was just as gratified as any of his fellow-directors this morning.

"We have no blanks in the sheep classes," he said. "We have entries in every class and our total of 219 sheep is just as good, if not better a showing, than last year, and last year's exhibit of sheep established a local record. We have forty in the Leicester class."

The swine entries, totalling 81, also maintain the Exhibition's record for this department.

J. O. Ball is not claiming any new high registration of horses, but the display is very satisfactory, both in quantity and quality. The number of entries follows: Carriage 29, roadsters 40, saddle 10, Clydesdales 16, Percherons 8, draught 32, agricultural 22, general purpose 21. Not bad for this motor age.

THRILL OF OTHER YEARS LOST IN VISIT TO BIGGEST MIDWAY THAT EVER PLAYED PETERBORO

Hark, Hark, Dogs Do Bark; Hundreds Coming To Town

W. G. Merrill is as proud as a peacock today.

Eighteen months ago people said to him: "It cant' be done."

Bill Merrill said it could. And he went ahead and did it.

It is the dog show.

Nearly four hundred dogs will present their visiting cards at the Exhibition gate on Friday, bark their greetings at the directors, and take their places in the two big tents assigned to their entertainment. One tent was enough last year, but the accomodation has been doubled and the directors are ready to receive a request from Mr. Merrill sometime today or tomorrow for another tent.

He'll get it, too, if he wants it.

HYLAN LOST OUT IN PRIMARY VOTE FOR MAYORALTY

Senator Walker Captures Democratic Nomination By Big Majority.

SMITH VS. HEARST.

Whole Tammany Ticket Made Clean Sweep, Beating Hylan Everywhere

NEW YORK, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Senator James J. W. Walker's lead over Mayor John F. Hylan, in the Democratic mayoralty primary stood at 92,095 at 7 a.m. to-day with 131 districts to be heard from out of 2,968.

Frank D. Waterman, Republican mayoralty candidate, was leading his nearest competitor by 92,476 votes.

The whole Tammany ticket scored a clean sweep yesterday. The Mayor lost even his nome borough of Brooklyn where McCooey, Tammany leader of the district, supported him.

Democrats and Republicans alike said in speeches that the Dmocratic primary was really a fight between Governor Smith and Mr. Hearst with potentialities as to the next Democratic national convention. Mr. Hearst in caustic long distance exchanges with Governor Smith, said he could not be a Democrat in a city where a "political mafia' like Tammany Hall held sway and promised to back Hylan" wherever the latter's judgment might lead them."

But Tammany's jubilation this morning was tampered with concern as to the possiblity of Mayor Hylan becoming an independent candidate, thus splitting the Democratic vote and giving the Republicans an excellent chance of electing Waterman. Indications were this morning that Hearst would put Hylan up as an Independent.

TARIFF COMMISSION BEING ESTABLISHED

Montreal Man Has Announced That He Would Be Member.

Fine Weather To-morrow Says Amiable Mr. Probs

Hooray! We're off! Mr. Probs and The Examiner's own weather man promise fine weather for the big Exhibition tomorrow. You may leave your umbrella at home, or return that one you borrowed "just in case"; hang up your raincoat till after the Fair, and generally go on down. The Meteorological Office Weatherprints, whose report appears in the north east corner of the front page every day, says a warm spell is heading here from the west. It must have been labelled "Peterborough Exhibition."

The risk of death from anesthetic is not so great as that from crossing a street, only thirty deaths from breathing gas having been reported in the last thirty years.

THRILL OF OTHER YEARS LOST IN VISIT TO BIGGEST MIDWAY THAT EVER PLAYED PETERBORO

Rides, Shows and Games Are New, Different and More Entertaining.

375 PEOPLE NEEDED

Wheel of Fortune is Back After Being Banned by the Law.

The midway at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition this year is without parallel in the history of the institution, either as to size or quality. In the matter of figures, there are 30 railroad coaches required to transport the 375 people and their effects; there are 7 big rides, some never seen here before; 15 sideshows, all new and up-to-date, and 52 stalls, including wheels of fortune, dart games, shooting galleries, and other diversions.

Perhaps more in the matter of the popular rides does this midway excel those that have gone before. The rides include the ferris wheel, old favorite with all ages; over the jumps, a new and greatly improved form of merry-go-round; the caterpillar, one of the most entertaining and thrilling of the newer rides; the merry mix-up, altogether new to Peterborough; the old but ever entertaining whip; and the dependable merry-go-round and carry-us-all. Because they are covered, the caterpillar and over the jumps had the biggest patronage in last night's inclement weather, but given dry weather all of the rides will provide great entertainment during the remaining four days of the fair.

Side-Shows.

The side-shows are so numerous and large that they have far overrun the space allotted them in other years, so that a new problem as to where cars are to be parked has arisen. Many of the artists with these shows were unable to get accommodation up town—there are 175 of them—and are camped on the grounds, adding to the congestion.

The Wild West Show is a favorite every year, as much for the clever animal work as for the daring of the riders and the skill of the rope throwers. With this year's exposition of the life of the wild west there are 40 head of stock. The show features male and female riders and trick horsemen who will demonstrate the exploits of the old frontier.

Law and the Outlaw is a brand new arrival with outdoor shows, showing in wax figures the lives and often tragic deaths of noted outlaws of more recent years. Notorious characters who have startled the country by their desperate ventures and crimes are depicted in life-like forms.

Circus Side Show, managed by T. W. Kelly, features freaks of nature from all over the world, all alive and all interesting.

Congress of Fat Ladies is one of the most unique shows of its kind ever put on the road. Here are the Charleston sisters, of Brooklyn, New York, said to be the fattest in Christendom.

"BRINGING UP FATHER" — Geo. McManus

MILITARY RITES AT FUNERAL OF LATE T. G. ILIFFE

Was One of Most Imposing Services Ever Held in Campbellford.

OFFICERS PRESENT

Regimental Chaplain Told of Sacrifices Made in Service of His Country.

CAMPBELLLFORD, Sept. 16.—One of the most imposing military funerals ever held in Campbellford was that of the late Sergeant Major Thomas G. Iliffe whose remains were laid at rest in Christ church cemetery Monday afternoon. Lieut. Col. Wolfraim of Colborne, commaner of the Northumberland Regiment and Brigadier F. D. Doggs of Cobourg, former commander, marched in the procession to church and cemetery.

The casket was draped with the colors in the defence of which the deceased made so many sacrifices, sacrifices that undermined his health and resulted in his untimely death. On the flag rested the cap of the deceased, the belt and weapons of his rank and a large number of floral wreaths from his former comrades and friends.

The 12 men in the firing squad marching ahead of the hearse was commanded by Lieut. Free and Sergeant Armstrong. Sergeant Major Winston was at the head of the company following the carriage which contained the chief mourners. The Regimental Band headed the procession playing The Dead March in Saul.

The remains were taken into Christ church where services were conducted by Rev. G. C. Clarke, rector, assisted by Rev. E. W. Ford of Brighton, chaplain of the Regiment, who delivered the discourse.

Without chosing a text the chaplain gave a brief statement of the life of the deceased. When the regiment met in camp at Cobourg last summer, he said, they little thought that their next gathering would be at the funeral of the Sergeant Major. The deceased at the time of the encampment had probably thought of death but no one can tell what a day or an hour may bring forth. The late Sergeant Major sowed the seeds of his untimely end contracted in his long military service.

The deceased enlisted in the service of the Empire when he was only 16. He was in the South African war where he was wounded. He was in hospital for months in the hospital before his discharge, when he came to Canada about 18 years ago with his wife and family.

The wound which the deceased had received in South Africa did not prevent him from enlisting when the Great War broke out. He saw duty and nit noly was willing but prepared to perform it. The life he disclosed would stand as an example which all might safely follow. It was to the sacrifices made by such men as the late Sergeant-Major that the country owes the peace, happiness and security which it enjoys today.

At the grave side the funeral service was read by Rev. G. C. Clarke and the firing squad discharged three volleys over the grave. The Last Post was sounded by Bandsman Walter Lowe.

The pall bearers, all sergeants in the Northumberland Regiment, were Sergeant Major Samis and his brother, Quartermaster-Sergeant Samis and Sergeant Packard of Brighton, Sergeants Waterling, Lambeth and Dalton of Campbellford.

Other officers in the procession besides the commander and former commander of the Regiment were Major Bygott, commander of the local company, Major Sophia of Brighton, Major Webb of Norwood and Lieutenant Belford, of Codrington.

PROGRESSIVES IN

stituency, and we believe there are very many men and women in the riding who have ideals similar to ours. So we expect a good attendance."

Mr. Brethen is quite frank in expressing his hope of Liberal support if he is chosen as Progressive candidate.

"But I would like to have it widely understood that I have made no pacts or agreements, nor have I had any dickerings with Liberals. They will choose their own course, and there are many reasons why they should fall in with us, but I want to be able to say truthfully that I have no arrangements with Liberals. I don't want to be in any position of as we found it."

making apologies, and I can say now that I have had no dickerings of any kind."

Mr. Brethen is inclined to believe that if he is the Progressive choice he will receive considerable support from Conservatives as well as Liberals.

"It is generally known," he continued, "that Dr. Embury of Bancroft, is not regarded by the Conservatives in this section as their strongest man. They had Bruce Airheart of Marmora picked out, and there was considerable disappointment when he was defeated at the Conservative convention last June.

"I have been told that Dr. Embury was preferred by the Conservative members in South Hastings because there was a growing dissatisfaction in the northern part of the county with the machine's direction of the party's affairs, and it was expected that Dr. Embury as the candidate in the new Hastings-Peterboro riding would strengthen Conservative interest in North Hastings."

Mr. Brethen is inclined to think that other factors may be taken into account before the campaign is over, and that on the whole the progressive candidate will have a strong following.

Hairbob, Campbellford Style, Pleases Philadelphia Lady

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 16.—Mrs. W. H. Kirkpatrick of Philadelphia, accompanied by her daughter and the latter's husband, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Foster of the same city, is on a visit to her sister, Mrs. W. M. Stephens, who resides on the Burnbrae road a short distance from town. The party made the trip by auto, covering the distance from Philadelphia, nearly 700 miles, in three days and they were delayed on the road for five and a half hours, owing to an accident to their car.

Mrs. Foster is the young society matron who while visiting at the Stephen's home a year ago, was struck by the artistic manner in which the ladies of Campbellford had their hair bobbed, the style here being far ahead of that prevailing in her home city. She went to a local barber who does a big business in that line and had her own locks trimmed in the latest Parisian fashion.

Mrs. Foster says that now she is here she will visit the same barber and have her hair cut again, adopting any new wrinkles that tonsorial art may have developed.

WORK STARTED ON NEW POWER HOUSE

All But Three of Those at Work Are Campbellford Men.

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 16.—There are at present about 25 men employed on the new power house, which is being erected at the paper mill and for which J. J. McNabb of Trenton has the contract. Of these all but three are Campbellford men, W. J. Sarginson is employed as blacksmith, James Farrell operating during the day the compressor which the contractor has rented from the town, while James McAvoy has charge of it during the night shift. Edward Naylor, who was foreman on sewer construction work during the past two years, is overseer of the drilling operations carried on at night.

The rate of wages for laborers is 30 cents an hour for a 10-hour day.

FRANCE PLANS STEP

clared, "the more you see its real aim is the attainment of permanent peace, for if you solve economic problems you are really solving disarmament."

By the terms of the resolution the League Council would decide on the proper time to summon the economic conference. M. Loucheur informed the Assembly that the French were inspired by no personal reasons to launch the idea, but believed that wisdom showed the necessity of seeking the deeper causes of war, which often were chiefly economic.

He pointed out that intensive efforts were being made by different countries to close their frontiers and reach a condition which might be called industrial isolation—a state of affairs, he added, "which is fraught with the gravest dangers."

M. Loucheur believed that such a conference would seek the causes of discord and heal them.

The present idea was to make the conference a big clearing house and hear the complaints of all nations concerning their economic difficulties.

The United States will be asked whether it wishes to participate in another international conference.

The disarmament commission voted to have the Council expedite preparations for a conference on the private manufacture of arms as a sequence to the recent conference on the control of the traffic in arms, and emphasized that it was indispensable to have United States co-operation, both in the preliminaries and in the conference itself. A draft convention will be drawn up and it is planned to convoke the conference before the next Assembly, if possible.

Another feature yesterday was the address of Raoul Fernandez, Brazilian jurist, who emphasized the pressing need of inter-continental pacts to supplement the proposed regional pacts of Europe. Making allusion to Japan, he said that more and more men were reaching Latin America from the Far East, and consequently its difficulties which were most likely to become urgent, were in regard to the relations between continent and continent.

REPORT DENIED

Canon Jones Says Report About Bishop Bidwell is Not Right.

KINGSTON, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—In a letter to the press yesterday Canon J. W. Jones, secretary of the Synod of Ontario denies a report published Monday to the effect that Bishop Bidwell had asked the executive committee of the Synod for the reconsideration of its decision recommending the acceptance of his resignation and that he had suggested that the committee had acted hastily in arriving at that decision.

AGRICULTURE, CADET DRILLS AND ADMISSION TO HIGH SCHOOL ARE DISCUSSED BY HAVELOCK BOARD

Teacher in Third Grade Given Authority to Teach Agriculture.

MAKE BOYS DRILL.

Pupils May Be Let Pass Entrance on Recommendation of Principal.

(By a Staff Reporter.)

HAVELOCK, September 16.—The Havelock School Trustees at their meeting on Tuesday night, decided to apply to the Minister of Agriculture for a ruling on Clause 5 of Regulation 11, which deals with the admission of pupils over 16, to the High School. It was also unanimously agreed to start the teaching of Agriculture in the third grade in connection with nature study.

Another matter discussed was the cadet work in the Continuation, and the department will be asked as to whether the trustees have the power to make it compulsory for every boy in that school, who is physically fit, to join the cadet corps.

Pupils over 16.

Principal D. R. Fletcher of the Continuation school, reported that the Board of Examiners for the county, had at a special meeting recommended for admission to that school eight pupils who had failed at the recent Entrance examinations. Of the six members of the board two were in favor a greater number but the other four were opposed to it. The majority hesitated, it seems, to establish a precedent.

This brought up a discussion of Regulation 11, Clause 5, which provides that the Entrance Board may grant pass standing for any consideration whatsoever to a candidate who has failed but who was 16 years or over at the time of the examination.

Dr. Thompson contended that this regulation was mandatory and that the examiners had no option but to pass all such pupils, but other members of the Board inclined to the opinion that the matter was optional.

Finally, on motion of Dr. Thompson and Trustee Barlow, it was decided to apply to the Minister of Education for a ruling.

Teaching of Agriculture.

Miss K. Payeau, teacher in the third grade of the Public School, asked the Board to authorize the teaching of agriculture in her department, this branch to be taught in connection with nature study, the time to be devoted to it being two half-hours a week. Miss Payeau said that in this way, she believed, pupils could be induced to take an interest in and to improve their home surroundings.

Trustee Moore asked Miss Payeau if she did not think it was difficult enough at present to prepare pupils for the entrance examination without adding another subject to their studies, a subject which was not required for admission to the High school. The teacher replied that the study of agriculture would not interfere with the time devoted to the regular curriculum as it would be taught in connection with nature study.

Principal Yuill agreed with what Miss Payeau had stated and on motion of Secretary Fennell and Dr. Thompson the request was granted, Miss Payeau being informed that she could start teaching agriculture in the morning if she so desired.

Teaching Cadet Work.

Principal Fletcher asked the trustees to make it compulsory for every boy in the Continuation school, physically fit, to join the cadet corps, as the trainer at present has no means of enforcing discipline as he would have if the cadet work was made a part of the regular programme.

Cadet Instructor Evans said that if he attempts to discipline a boy the latter is likely to drop out of the corps. In other High schools, Tweed and Campbellford for example, cadet work is compulsory and these schools have excellent corps.

People who object to cadet work in the schools do not understand it. The number of members and of corps are constantly increasing in Ontario, and Instructor Evans claimed that this goes to show that this branch is now recognized as a valuable asset of school work. He did not believe that more than three or four parents would object to having their boys in the corps. Every boy who is physically fit, he said, should be made to take the drill. Mr Evans added that for at least seven days before the annual inspection of the cadets by an officer from the Militia Department, the instructor should have an hour a day to prepare the boys so that they could make a creditable showing.

Last school year Havelock had 44 cadets, and this number is entitled to a grant of $55 from the Militia Department, but, according to Mr. Evans, only $43.75 was actually received. Mr. Evans suggested that Captain Heron of Kingston, cadet inspector, be asked for an explanation.

To Consult Department.

The trustees did not care to assume the responsibility of making the work compulsory, and on motion of Trustees Barlow and Dr. Thompson, it was decided to ask the Department of Education for a ruling as to their powers with regard to cadet work.

Public Not Represented.

At a mass meeting held to discuss the school situation some time ago several ratepayers complained that they were not kept informed as to what the trustees did at their meetings. The reply to this was that all the sessions were open to the public, and that everybody was welcome to attend.

The invitation has not been accepted Outside of those whose duty it was to attend no one was at the meeting last night. The trustees discuss everything openly, make no attempt to keep any matter from the public and afford the press every opportunity to secure information.

Question to be Discussed

The next meeting of the Board will be held on Tuesday, October 20, when one of the questions to be discussed will be the admission of pupils to the High School on the recommendation of the Public School which they attend instead of compelling them to write at the entrance examination. The trustees appear to be of the opinion that the system of recommendation should be adopted in Havelock just as it has been in other centres.

Trustee Fennell is a strong advocate of admission by recommendation. He stated last night that the pupil's standing would be based on the result of monthly examinations which would mean careful preparation and would make it impossible for him to neglect his work early in the year and in the last two or three months cram for the entrance examination. Mr. Fennel said further that some pupils, thoroughly equipped for High School studies failed to pass the entrance on account of nervousness and so lost an entire year's work.

OBITUARY.

MRS. E. PHILP.

COLBORNE, Sept. 16.—A very sudden death took place here on Friday when Mrs. E. Philp passed away. Mrs. Philp had returned to her home a few days before, after attending her brother's funeral, and had been usually well. Friday morning she was somewhat indisposed, but not enough so to cause serious concern. A little later she appeared worse and a physician was summoned. He was just leaving the house when he was hastily recalled as she had been seized with a weak spell. She passed away in a few moments later. Mrs. Philp before her marriage was Miss Moffatt. She was a lady who was held in very high regard. She is survived by her husband, but leaves no family.

Isn't it apt to be thought something of a social phenomenon for a tramp to be seeking work?"

"It sure is," Jim chuckled, "and that's what will put you over. They'll be flabbergasted enough to make you roundhouse foreman. Seriously, though, after Morran sizes you up he'll fit you in some place, all right."

He studied in silence for a few moments Bob's straight, lithe figure and swinging, elastic carriage. Then, with fond admiration:

"You're a husky customer, and I guess Morran'll put you to firing. You can step up to driving, from that, when you know the ropes. Say, wouldn't it be great if you got to the throttle of the Limited herself some day, and we'd be making the run together!"

Bob smiled to himself at Jim's naive summation of the ultimate goal of Crater City's ambitious citizenry. A small mark, to say the least, for one of his. Still, outwardly he agreed in a flat tone that undoubtedly it would be an ideal achievement, but too high and too far to be dreamt of for the present.

They were down into the town now. Crater City, cupped in a jagged saucer of ancient volcanic foothills that surged over many broad counties like congealed ocean waves, was intolerantly conscious of its standing as Mountain Division Headquarters of the great, cross-continental, Transrockian Railroad and impudently boastful of its importance as the largest town—despite its modest thousand odd souls—in a day's run, east or west, over mountain or prairie. A tardy modern Main Street rose in chicken and goat haunts on the hill and flowed its cobblestoned way past thin banks of houses and, finally, a block-long accretion of garages, stores and a bank just before it mushroomed out into the green, scraggly-flowered lake of the Transrockian Depot plaza; thence its commercial flotsam eddied into a besmirched streetlet that ran parallel to the railroad.

Jim was one of the few real estate iconoclasts who had adventured into the high outskirts of the town. But the Widow O'Leary, whose pioneering blood had been thoroughly drained by a steerage passage to America forty years before when she was—well, when she was forty years younger—had a large house near the center of town where it crowded like a brood hen over the flock of bungalows on either side. Business considerations, too, had a hand in Mrs. O'Leary's location, for she "took boarders," in addition to occasional unpaid activities as a nurse and regular well-paid drudgery in a backyard elbow-power laundry.

She was zealously engaged in the latter branch of her manifold enterprises when Bob and Jim stopped by to inquire after the baby, to whom Mrs. O'Leary accorded the distraction and care of star boarder in her menage.

Mrs. O'Leary stepped side from her tub and revealed with a hush warning a plump infant where it was sleeping in a small, padded washbasket under the spacious tent of her skirts. Jim was duly impressed with the obvious serenity of his son and heir; Bob, similarly, with his namesake.

Mrs. O'Leary's tongue pumped industriously in time with her arms as they resumed the soapy massaging of some engineer's balbriggans. Upon learning that Bob had decided to get work and remain with Jim, she scolded.

"Now, you boys can't be living up there alone. It's too big for you, and too far for me to be trottin' back and forth in the care of it. Besides,"—gently to Jim, "'tis better for you not to live in rooms and with things that always remind you——"

She pointed over a bepicketed succession of small backyards.

"Do you mind that brown bungalow down the block. I have it for rent, and it's just small enough for the two of you and near enough for me to keep house for you without abusing me rheumatism. It will be almost as good as having the little one home with you."

Jim and Bob agreed helplessly in the face of the Widow's kindly but positive management of their affairs, then betook themselves once more toward the Yards.

To spare both Bob and himself Main Street's gauntlet of stares Jim led a diverted way down a side street and across wooded fields toward the flank of the bustling Yard.

Proceeding quietly in one of the mutually preoccupied moods that often fell upon them, they were startled suddenly when a fat, panting, excited figure lurched out of some shrubbery and confronted them.

"Potts!" exclaimed Bob, genuinely pleased. Then, quickly, "Why what's the matter—you look as though someone had asked you to work."

"Matter enough, my dear erstwhile companion," moaned the Professor. "The Yard dicks are in search of me. I am unjustly accused of the theft of some brass journals. Spike stole them, but he cunningly managed to implicate me—me, Potts, an innocent and harmless man, sir, above reproach in matters of personal integrity where the propert and rights of others are concerned, as you know, my dear boy! What am I to do? If they apprehend me I shall be convicted without a chance. See—he slipped these into my pocket. I was about to throw them away when I saw you. Won't your kind looking young friend here return them for me and fix the blame where it belongs?"

Bob took the journals. "I can vouch for this man, Jim, if you'll help me explain to the railroad detectives."

Jim readily agreed, whereupon Potts overwhelmed him with oratorical and flowery expressions of gratitude.

"What did you do with the money you got for saving the Limited?" Bob broke in humorously.

Potts, hangdogishly alert in the manner of his nomadic kind, was ready to scuttle off at the first alarm during his lachrymose explanation:

"Spike insisted upon a division, so I had to allot him half of the purse as it is difficult for a man of my naturally liberal and generous tendencies to resist the importuning of a friend—especially when that friend is equipped with a steel claw!" Potts caressed the seat of his pants in woeful reminiscence. "Then, sir, he borrowed my half!"

Bob and Jim choked from a mixtvre of uncontrollable mirth at the comic opera complexion of tragic futility on Potts' face and of angry contempt for the tactics of the sinister bully, Spike. So vehement were the promises of the young men to avenge him that peace of mind descended upon Potts like a gentle rain. Bathed in benign contentment he waddled off, jauntily unafraid, flourishing a fatly coy hand.

"Goodbye, my dear boys, and God bless you—Pottsey will not forget you. And say, you'll find Spike hiding in the third car of that string of cattle empties on the southermost siding."

Potts broke into a carefree whistling of "Daisy Bell" as he marched toward the lonesome open spaces.

Not many minutes later, Bob and Jim picked their way across the coal dusty yards and shimmering rails which, in the raw shower of sunlight, seemed to undulate like silver snakes, and located Morran by hearing before coming within sight of him. He was paying his disrespects to an erring wiper upon the subject of empty oilcans and emptier heads in tones that outdid the sun in lifting the atmospheric temperature. Morran was small, warped like a pickle barrel spigot; a red-headed, throbbing, half-century old but undiminished fireball, dynamic as increment left on earth by a flash of lightning might be, which may or may not have been the thought that inspired the Division's nickname for him—"Bolts."

Sparks seemed to flash steadily across the bridge of "Bolts'" nose from one of his eyes to the other when Jim after introducing Bob, turned in the stolen journals and divulged the facts of Spike's whereabouts. Over the yard telephone Morran summoned detectives from the headquarters offices, arranging an immediate rendezvous at the scene of Spike's hiding place.

Spike surrendered with waspish bad grace to overwhelming numbers when he was surprised and routed out. His malevolent eyes glowered upon Bob a promise of unforgotten and now augmented hatred.

ARE WE INTERESTED IN SCHOOLS?

There is a growing interest in the broad problem of education; but a fair survey of the situation as respects the common people very plainly suggests that this interest is not general. It does not exist in sufficient degree at the vital centre—the home. For example, how many parents having children at school have ever taken the trouble to come into contact with the teachers whose relationship with those children is so important? There is room for the fear that the answer would be disquieting. Probably nine parents out of ten have never seen the inside of the school in which their children are being educated.

If genuine progress in respect of education is to be made there should be less public detachment from everything relating to schools. This is particularly true of large communities. It is perhaps one of the drawbacks of city life that parents take most things for granted as relates to the school system and all that happens within that system. The children are sent to school, and that is pretty much the end of the matter in the average home. Only the few take a direct personal interest in what goes on within the scope of the plans of the Board of Education.

If we are to base an opinion on what appears in the public press, it would seem that in some of the larger cities of the United States there has been an awakening in the matter of parental interest in the common schools. In New York, for example, there is a United Parents' Association, which has demonstrated its interest in the question of education by sending out 14 suggestions. Some of these sugestions may seem commonplace, and yet it is the sum total of ordinary things which make up the solution of what is regarded by the association as a serious problem. Here are some of them:

"Arrange the breakfast and lunch hours so that there is no rushing at home or at school.

"Encourage punctuality and regular attendance, not permitting trifles to interfere.

"See that the children are dressed simply, neatly, modestly and suitably in accordance with the weather.

"Insist upon children under 14 having at least ten hours' sleep.

"Find out how much time should be devoted to home work and see that it is faithfully done.

"Provide a quiet place for home study, with good light and ventilation. Prevent interruptions as far as possible.

"Show an interest in the children's school work, athletics and other activities.

"Visit the classroom during Open School Week and at other times for a better understanding.

"Do not criticise the teachers or school at all within the children's hearing. Always hear both sides of every question and ask the teacher about it.

"Instill in the children habits of obedience and respect for authority.

"Picture the school as a happy, desirable place rather than as one children should dread."

Perhaps the suggestion which has the deepest significance is that which relates to "habits of obedience and respect for authority." If competent sociologists are to be believed, at that point we come in contact with one of the salient needs of our time. It attaches to the very foundations of ordered society.—Ottawa Journal.

CURBING THE SENATE.

The "Mother of Parliaments" found it necessary some years ago to take drastic measures to curb the powers of the irresponsible portion of that body, namely, the House of Lords. The fight which ended in the destruction of the veto power of the upper House was one of the most spectacular events of recent British history. It was led by Premier Asquith, with Mr. Lloyd George, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, as his chief lieutenant. The trouble came to a head over the antagonism of the Lords toward the social reform program of the Liberal Government. Ancient Tory ideas were outraged at the plans for aid to the aged and poor at the expense of the State, which, to them, meant higher taxes on their great land holdings or their incomes.

The crisis came in the rejection by the Lords of the Budget of 1909, which included provision for old-age pensions. This provision was described by the Chancellor, in his picturesque manner, as a "war budget" against poverty, which he hoped would become "as remote to the people of this country as the wolves which once infested these forests." There was an election in the following January, but the Government was not strong enough to proceed, and in a second contest in December of the same year the Asquith Government was again returned, with the understanding that enough Peers would be added to the House of Lords to give effect to the policy, if that became necessary.

The Parliament Act of 1911 was the outcome of the struggle. Under its provisions the Lords lost the power to reject or amend a money bill, or to reject any bill which had passed in three successive sessions of the House of Commons, with a minimum time limit of two years between the second reading in the first session and the final passing in the Commons.

This precedent has been often discussed in connection with the proposals for Senate reform in Canada. It forms a specially potent example for the restriction of a legislative body of men appointed for life and without any responsibility to the public, and very often none to the Cabinet of the day which has a majority support direct from the people. How the reform may be secured remains to be worked out, and no responsible public man appears to be in a hurry to divulge plans. Premier King proposes reform from within by an advance promise of his appointees that they will support the Government's policy for Senate reform. That at best will be a slow process.

At the opening of Parliament in February last the Speech from the Throne made this reference to Senate reform: "You will be asked to sanction the calling of a conference between the Federal and Provincial Governments to consider the advisability of amending the British North America Act with respect to the constitution and powers of the Senate, and in other important particulars."

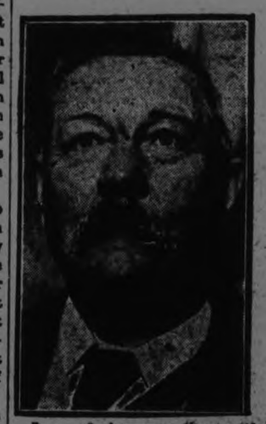
The inclusion of the Provinces in such a conference has been interpreted as meaning possible appointment of Senators wholly or in part by Provincial Legislatures. The United States' experience showed the unwisdom of that plan of electing its Senate, and after grave abuses of power it turned to popular election for a stated term of six years. Canada can learn something from the experience of both Britain and the United States, and must take up the question earnestly and in a practical manner.—The Globe.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Let us make it 30,000 in 1925.

The advance notices have been lived up. Peterborough ... to the fullest ... passed.

DOYLE'S OPINION.



Joan of Arc was "unquestionably" a medium and a very great one," according to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, novel-spiritualist. "She had 'spells'; she had visions; she heard mysterious voices," declared Sir Arthur, who is attending the International Spiritualist Congress in Paris.

THRILL OF OTHER YEARS LOST, ETC.

tion attractions. Boyd and Linderman's autodrome is noted in United States and Canada as the scene of the most thrilling in motor racing. Here a young lady races her motorcycle around the perpendicular wall at the terrific speed of 60 miles an hour, coming within inches of the top of the bowl. She is assisted by several other daring riders who will demonstrate their skill at every performance.

Freak Animal Show. One of the most novel attractions carried by any organization of outdoor expositions is the freak animal show conducted by Norman Shields. There are 40 animals here, all alive and all freaks of nature. Dead animals may be treated to increase their oddities, but these animals are alive and in their natural state.

Midgets. The congress of midgets features the smallest mother on earth.

Minstrels. Boyd and Linderman's Merry Minstrels appear in plantation songs and dances such as are participated in in the sunny south. A big party of colored entertainers of both sexes contributes to a sterling programme.

War Exhibit. There have been war exhibits here before, tents that contained a dozen pictures of battlefields and nothing more, but this years' show is something different. A prominent Peterborough army officer who went through the tent last night declared it a splendid show. The pictures, it is understood, are genuine official war photographs, and there are many interesting and entertaining souvenirs of the battlefields.

Jiggs' Bungalow. This is a funny playhouse for the kiddies, but their elders will want to go through too. No one will stop them, but they must not blame the Fair Board if they get different ideas of married life.

Athletic Show. Jack Morrow has a great congress of athletes who will demonstrate their prowess to all comers.

Monkey Speedway. While the men were busy fixing up the big marquee for the monkey speedway hundreds of children sat as still as mice, watching the monkeys nibbling crusts and playing around on the grass. There was no performance, of course, but the children were well entertained by the antics of the funny little creatures. Today the monkeys will drive their autos around a speed course and no one should miss the fun.

Scores of Games.

By a recent ruling, wheels of fortune and 'Housey-House" are permitted at fall fairs since September 1, and there are many in evidence at the Exhibition grounds. Whereas two years ago these were raided by the police and nine of the managers hailed into police court here, last night the police walked past unheeding the crowds that gathered around every stall. Kewpie dolls are not much in evidence this year as in former seasons, but fancy blankets, comforters, household utensils and other valuable prizes are offered.

There are shooting galleries, hoop-tossing contests, a fortune telling tent, ball games, dart games, and many other tests of skill, and any one who wishes to spill the milk has several opportunities to scatter the milk bottles. Even the shooting galleries are not the usual kind. In one of those parked at the Exhibition grounds the marksman has the opportunity of hitting red roosters, while in another bell-ringing targets are offered as marks.

There are more hot-dogs than ever before, more varieties of candy, more soft drinks, and an innovation is the big Midway Cafe that greets visitors at the George street gate.

Everyone who has visited it agrees that never before has Peterborough had so pretentious a midway.

The oldest clock in Britain is now at the museum of Patents at South Kensington. It was made at Glaston Abbey by one of the monks in 1325, and in Elizabeth's reign was removed from Glastonbury to Wells Cathedral. It worked there until about 60 years ago when it was laid aside to make room for a new clock.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—There was no improvement in the foreign demand for Canadian grain on the Montreal market today, and in consequence the market was quiet. There was some demand from local houses for car lots of Ontario and Quebec oats, and sales of No. 2 white were made at 51 1-4 cents per bushel, and No. 3 white at 48 1-2 cents per bushel, ex-track, with Ontario No. 3 malting barley quoted at 83 cents per bushel, ex-track. There were bids in the market for No. 1 Northern spring wheat at 13 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg October option, c.i.f., with 13 1-2 cents asked, and 8 1-4 cents over for No. 3 Northern.

The feature of the local flour market was that the weaker feeling that prevailed for winter wheat grades and prices were reduced 10 to 20 cents per barrel. A moderate amount of business was done.

The tone of the spring wheat flour market was steady under a steady demand from local and country buyers.

On account of the continued limited supplies of millfeed available on spot at present, and the continued good demand from country buyers, the tone of the market remains very firm and prices were unchanged. The demand for standard grades of rolled oats was better and a moderate amount of business was accomplished at steady prices.

Owing to the increasing scarcity of fresh eggs, the tone of the local market was again stronger and prices were marked up another 3-4c per pound. The cheese market was steady under a good demand.

Beans were steady at $2.40 per bushel.

EGG PRICES

OTTAWA, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—The egg market is strong under light receipts. Consumptive demand is good. The supply of extras is not now equal to the demand and the tendency is for higher prices for this grade. Prices of fresh firsts and seconds are firm, and will be governed largely from now on by the storage situation.

Toronto—Egg market firm. Jobbing, special 44, extras 42, firsts 38, seconds 34.

Montreal.—Egg market strong. Extras 41 1-2, firsts 37, seconds 30 1-2, Ontario points. Receipts are light with demand good for extras.

Winnipeg—Jobbing extras 38 firsts 35 seconds 31 Poultry receipts light for week and quality improving.

Edmonton—Egg market firm with receipts light. Jobbing, extras 40, firsts 35, seconds 30. Poultry receipts increasing.

Vancouver—Fresh laid firm and advancing. Jobbing, extras 48, firsts 46, seconds and pullets 40.

Charlottetown, P.E.I.—Egg market firm with demand good. Dealers paying country points, extras 34, firsts 30, seconds 25.

Chicago—Spot 32, December refrigerators 32 1-8.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Heavy buying ascribed to big traders, who have been aggressive sellers of late turned the wheat market upward today after an early decline. Rains northwest tended to curtail the movement of new wheat and No. 2 Red Winter grade available for immediate delivery here commanded the highest premium of the season. Closing quotations were unsettled at 3-4 to 1 1-8c net gain, December $1.50 1-4 to $1.50 3-8 and May $1.53 3-8 to $1.53 5-8, with corn unchanged to 1c off; oats 1-8 to 1-4c down, and provisions varying from 20c decline to 17c advance.

At to-day's top level the wheat market for the principal month, December, was exactly 4 cents a bushel higher than yesterday's bottom figures. Much of the gain in price, however, was wiped out in the last few minutes.

Undoing of recent heavy spreads between wheat and corn was a feature of today's trading. The process was responsible for a good deal of the speculative buying of wheat and for simultaneous selling of corn. Indications of lively demand for durum wheat from this country attracted notice, and there was also late gossip that Canadian shippers had withdrawn most of their wheat offers from the export market.

For the most part, corn trading was in the hands of a few large houses. The market scored early gains, but later declined. Oats followed corn.

Provisions were irregular. Nearby deliveries were firm, but distant deliveries weak.

STERLING EXCHANGE

Further irregularity developed in the foreign exchange market. Demand sterling held firm around $4.84 3-8, French francs were slightly higher around 4.72 cents, and Italian and Belgian currencies were heavy, the latter falling below 4.35 cents to a new low record for the year. Bills on Oslo were again in brisk demand, with the result that Norwegian kroner ruled about 35 points higher around 21.65 cents. Polish zloty recovered 10 points of yesterday's 40 point decline by rallying to 17.60 cents.

A THOUGHT.

INDUSTRY AND INDIVIDUALITY IDENTICAL.

No successful business man can continue to go ahead unless a certain amount of his income is invested in plans to improve machinery and methods.

How can a small man hope to progress without putting a reasonable percentage of his income into mind culture?

If a big and going business must make this investment, a small and struggling man certainly should. Industry and individuality, in this respect, are identical.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

All letters bearing on the pending General Election or political questions must bear the authentic name of the writer for publication. No letter will be published without the writer's name. This step is taken to protect the candidates from anonymous attacks and to assure Examiner readers of the legitimacy of the expressions of opinion in the communications.

NOTE WELL.

Owing to space limitations no letter can be published that contains more than 300 words.

SAYS DOGS POISONED

The Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir.—I see the dog poisoner is busy in Byersville again.

Several weeks ago six valuable dogs were destroyed by poison, in a radius of about five hundred yards. This afternoon another dog was poisoned; when the veterinary surgeon performed the post mortem on the animal, it was found the poison had been put in a sausage, the same as was found in four of the other dogs."

Now, Mr. Editor, it is pretty near time that a stop was put to this business. Suppose a child should happen to pick up a sausage, which a child might do if he saw it, in his play, it would mean a very serious thing.

There should be a law against throwing poison around on the street.

No wonder the residents of Byersville are up in arms and have urged the provincial police to use their utmost experts in rounding up the culprit.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,
DOG OWNER.

VETERANS' NOTICE

The Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir, — The annual general meeting of the Peterboro branch Great War Veterans Association will be held in the rooms on Monday, Sept. 21st, 1925, at 8.00 p.m. when business will be the receiving of annual reports, the election and installation of officers and any other business that may come before the meeting. I wish through your columns to extend an invitation to the members to attend.

Members in good standing and those entitled to vote are those who have paid their dues or those who are in arrears not more than three months.

This meeting is important as no doubt the subject of unity among veterans will be discussed and possibly action taken thereon. Officers will be elected who will be responsible for the carrying on of your wishes in this subject and also the other business of the branch for the next twelve months. A great responsibility rests on every returned man, that he now take interest in association for his and his comrades' future good. Every veteran whether he is an ex-member or not may join it and help the solution of these questions. The present fee of $1.25 per half year (in advance) if paid on or before the meeting will enable you to take part in these discussions. Very likely the question of increased fees will have to be decided on at this meeting due to the fact that we will have to provide in future for capitation tax. The branch has made a settlement with the Provincial and Dominion Commands and have paid their capitation tax up to Sept. 30, 1925.

There has been kicking between the time of the General Meetings by ex-members of veterans who are not attached to any organization. Now is the time to settle all these questions. Air your views or possible complaints at this meeting. Elect the officers of your choice then all get behind and push for a successful year and the unity of all returned men in Canada.

You will be agreeably surprised to see what has been accomplished by those who have carried on in years past notwithstanding misunderstandings and sometimes gross abuse. No doubt errors have been made but they might have been avoided if you had done your part. I, personally, wish to appeal to all ex-members of the G.W.V.A. You have probably left for some personal reason, a dislike of some individual or some action taken. Have you stopped to consider that you have a great influence. By agitation outside the branch you have hindered hundreds from joining also partially alienated public sympathy for the returned soldier. Now is the time to adjust all such matters, not by soap-box speeches in the public parks or offensive remarks in the press but by your presence and help not only at this meeting but for the future.

Remember that the returned men will need an association more in the future than in the past and you may be the individual who will need benefit. We have already assisted hundreds who were not members. Join now and get in good standing for this meeting. Take part in all the work, come to us with constructive ideas and you will find that the present officers are only too anxious to retire, get in behind and help you carry on.

I address the above to the larger mass of veterans who, I believe, are sincere in their regard for their fellow comrades. To the few who have always obstructed and will always do so, who will cause dissention for their own selfish, political, religious or any other reasons, I will give warning, that the men who have stuck together so far will do so to protect the valuable property and assets that have been accumulatd for the benefit of all returned men.

Yours sincerely,
R. E. Layfield,
Commander Peterboro Branch
Great War Veterans Association.

LARGE FUND RAISED TO AID BOOTLEGGER

Bribes Paid To Secure His Relief From Usual Jail Discipline.

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The Chicago Herald and Examiner today said a $60,000 fund was raised to buy freedom for Terry Druggan, wealthy beer runner, whose immunity from the usual county jail discipline has started a Federal Grand Jury inquiry.

The "jackpot" was to be split five ways. Three men were to get $10,000 each and the other $30,000 was to be split by two men, but one "double-crossed the other and kept it all."

Six Bank Bandits, Held For Extradition, Make Clean Get Away.

SEATTLE, Wn., Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Six prisoners, including T. H. Johnson and James Burns, held pending extradition to Canada in connection with the $42,000 Royal Bank robbery at Nanimo, last December, escaped from the King County Jail this morning. The men forged their way out by using two revolvers and a knife, and made their escape in an automobile owned by the jail.

Alvin Kilbourne, held on a robbery charge in connection with the holding up of the State Bank of Bothwell last June, when two of his companions were recaptured, also got away.

KID M'COY WILL HAVE NEW TRIAL

Former Prize Fighter, Now in San Quentin, Won His Appeal.

Manslaughter Charge.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 16—Norman Selby, former prize fighter known as Kid McCoy, today won his fight for a new trial on a charge of manslaughter for which he is serving a term in San Quentin Prison. He was convicted in connection with the killing of Mrs. Theresa Mors here in August, 1924.

The second district court of appeals held that the failure of the convicting court to inform the jury that the admissions, statements or confessions of the defendant could not be considered by them for any purpose having to do with proof of the corpus delicti, until they were satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the prosecution had established the fact of such violated the rights of McCoy.

McCoy, at first charged with murdering the wife of Albert Mors, wealthy antique dealer, finally was convicted on the manslaughter charge after a jury had deliberated for sixty-eight hours. A second trial followed, in which McCoi was found guilty of assault, intent to commit murder and grand larceny. These were the outgrowth of a shooting orgy the prize fighter staged on the morning Mrs. Mors' body, shot through the head, was found in the apartment which she and McCoy had occupied as man and wife.

SPANIARDS PLOT KRIM'S CONQUEST

Must Capture Two Moroccan Strongholds to Consolidate Position.

KRIM WILL WITHDRAW.

GIBRALTAR, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The first objective of the Spanish forces in the Alhucemas Bay zone, when they actually begin their advance on Ajdir, the capital of Abd-El-Krim, will be the two Moroccan strongholds of Adrar Sellum and Rocosa. Against these points it is planned for the Spaniards to advance from their actual base at Cebadilla Beach and at two points on Morro and Nuevo, all these points being on the Bay of Alhucemas.

The capture of Adrar Sellum and Rocosa is absolutely indispensable for the Spaniards, it is said, for otherwise they will be unable to dominate with any precision the beach of Suani and Ajdir with their guns. Unless they are able to do this any advance on Ajdir would be attended by serious danger.

It is reported that Abd-El-Krim, in the event that Ajdir is captured by the Spaniards, intends to withdraw with the bulk of his tribesmen into mountain fastnesses, where he is supposed to have prepared strongly fortified camps.

MASSEY SAYS THIS ELECTION IS CRUCIAL

National Problems Should Be Viewed in Terms of National Welfare.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—Vincent Massey, whose acceptance of a position in the Mackenzie King Cabinet was announced yesterday, in an interview today said: "I believe this election to be one of the most crucial in the history of Canada; crucial because the very unity of the country is at stake.

"We as Canadians have it in our power in the coming crisis to demonstrate our ability to view the national problems in terms of the national welfare, rather than in the light of sectional interest. If we fail the national structure will be weakened.

"I believe that the Government of Mr. King has presented a program which can be regarded as national in the fullest sense of the term.

"The vexed question of the tariff is to be dealt with for the first time as an economic question to be submitted to continuous scientific investigation."

Blue-jay is the delightful way to end a corn. A tiny cushion, cool as velvet, fits over the corn—relieving the pressure. The pain stops at once. Soon the corn goes. Blue-jay leaves nothing to guess-work. You do not have to decide how much or how little to put on. Each downy plaster is a complete standardized treatment, with just the right amount of the magic medication to end the corn.

The dainty woman does not KEEP Corns

Almost every woman spends hours every week in the care of her face—cold-creaming it, cleansing it, massaging it, to guard against the tiniest blemish. . . . But that doesn't prove her daintiness. It may merely indicate pride and vanity. . . . The real proof of perfect daintiness is the care a woman takes of the things that are not seen. . . . A blemish on her foot is as objectionable to her as one on her face. The moment a corn appears, she applies a Blue-jay. At once the pain goes, in 48 hours the corn goes too.

THE QUICK AND GENTLE WAY TO END A CORN

MARITIMES HEAR LAUDING WORDS FROM MEIGHEN

Commends Their Raising Banner of Revolt Against Government.

WHAT CAN BE DONE.

Said Railway Problem Was Becoming Worse—"Even Baffling."

HALIFAX, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press). — Mr. Meighen expressed pleasure at being back in the Maritime provinces. His pleasure was enhanced by the fact that two years ago Halifax had "raised the banner of revolt against the government and given the signal to the rest of Canada by sending down to Ottawa such a distinguisher representative as Mr. Black." He predicted the return of Mr. Black at the next election.

"I am told that down in the Maritime Provinces party labels don't count for much," said Mr. Meighen. Disappointment, he understood, reigned in regard to the association of Confederation. "None of the factors in Canadian politics has engaged my attention to the extent of the Maritime problems." He did not come with a solution of the problems, but he hoped to indicate the lines which should be followed in finding a solution of the difficulties from which they suffered. "I'm not going to promise what can't be done," he said, "but I shall try to indicate what can be done."

The transportation problem in Canada today was becoming worse and "even baffling," said the Conservative leader. With two great transportation systems, one of them brought into being by the failure of a number of roads which had behind them the guarantee of th government. The Canadian National did not pay. As a matter of fact in the last two years $234,000,000 had been added to the debt of the system which was three-quarters of the debt of Canada before the war.

"The debt of the railway system is just as much the debt of you and me as if we had signed its notes," declared Mr. Meighen. This government did not tell the people.

"The truth of the matter is this," said the speaker. "We owe in two years $234,000,000 more than we did and we must pay for it out of taxes or railway revenues."

There had been a measure of relief in rates for the West which was "utterly undefensible," said Mr. Meighen. The government by legislation, had granted the Crow's Nest rates on grain and flour to the West, and in this way "rivetted" the high rates prevailing onto the Maritime Provinces.

His policy in the matter of railway rates was summarized as follow: "The rates fixed should be fair to the roads and fair to the public, but having done that, then there should be a portion of these rates paid for the benefit of the outlying parts of the country from the general treasury of the nation. By that, you will tie the Maritime Provinces closer to union, and the Dominion as a whole will share the geographical burden which, under present conditions, the Maritimes and Western Provinces share themselves."

Mr. Meighen charged the government with adopting a method which was utterly indefensible" in legislating for reduced rates on grain and flour in the West." This had been granted at the expense of other parts of Canada, and as a result the high rates prevailing were "rivited" on the Maritime Provinces. He reviewed the situation of the Canadian National Railways, claiming that they had been saddled by the government with a debt of $234,000,000 in two years time. He advocated withholding money for further capital investment, and the institution of "a careful and scrupulously honest management."

A reference to the appointment of Vincent Massey to the government featured the speech.

"It is very easy for Mr. Massey, having secured immunity, while others suffered, to make the grand stand play of entering the government," Mr. Meighen said. Implement manufacturers had not been the ones hit by the reduction in duties on agricultural implements but the makers of those commodities entering into the manufacture of implements had suffered seriously.

Officials Say Warden Took Log Book When He Was Discharged.

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—Terrence Druggan's "In Again, Out Again" stunts at the Cook County Jail progressed merrily yesterday while a Federal grand jury tried to find out how he did it.

The wealthy beer runner, whose freedom of the jail, including frequent departure from it while he was supposed to be serving a year's sentence for contempt imposed by a Federal court, has invoked the inquiring scrutiny of the Federal jury, was found downstairs in a comfortable room smoking Tuesday morning when reporters called at the jail to discover his cell empty and the door open. Guards explained he had been turned loose to get a shave.

Not only has Druggan walked in, out and around the jail, but the records of his peregrinations have also been making journeys, it was disclosed when a search for the jail "log" showing when he was out and when he was in, revealed that the record also has vanished. Jail officials said a former warden who was discharged as a result of the liberties allowed Druggan had taken it with him.

Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson summoned Sheriff Peter M. Hoffman to appear before him to-day to tell all he knows about Druggan's travels.

Druggan also has been summoned to appear before the Grand Jury today.

HOLLAND WILL REDUCE ARMIES

Queen's Speech From Throne Announces Policy of Government.

KEEP DEFENCES.

THE HAGUE, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—Pending the realization of the League of Nation's hopes of a general limitation of armaments, efforts will be made immediately for the gradual reduction of Holland's military forces, while maintaining a defense compatable with the present international situation.

This policy was enunciated by Queen Wilhelmina yesterday in the Speech from the Throne opening a new session of the Dutch Parliament.

MISSIONARY TELLS EXPERIENCE IN S. A.

Illustrated By Lantern Slides and Various Articles od Dress.

OMEMEE, Sept. 16.—Mr. Storey, a returned South American missionary, visited Omemee on Friday and gave an illustrated lecture in the United Church on Friday evening. Mr. Storey visited the students of the High and Public Schools during the day, and this, his only announcement, was sufficient to draw a fair audience to hear many facts of interest about the South American people, of whom there are 500 tribes of Indians, one tribe numbering 5,000,000 people, thousands of whom are quite uncivilized and have yet to hear the gospel for the first time. Many barbarous customs of the various tribes were cited by the speaker.

After showing many weird as well as beautiful lantern slides, the lecturer, having with him several articles of South American dress, etc., demonstrated these to the audience, humorously pointing out that the styles of today, which many believe to have been copied from Paris, are really copies of the garb worn by heathen nations. The dress worn by the ladies of South America is sleeveless and is made of two yards of material, being much like the slip-on dresses so popular here, but is called a "tea poy." The coats worn by the men are simply two pieces of cloth about 1 1-2 yards long, sewed together lengthwise, with an opening in the centre for the head. This garment has various other uses, such as a scarf, cape, trousers and blanket, all of which were demonstrated by the lecturer.

The American idea of a cream soda with a straw was gathered also from the national drink of South America, only the vessel used there is used by many before it is washed. Mr. Storey's lecture was most interesting, and his appeal to the young people to respond to the call for missionaries to "go and tell" gave much food for thought among the many young listeners.

At the close of the views Mr. Storey sang a very appropriate solo, to the pleasure of all.

PAYMENTS LARGE.

More Than Billion Gold Marks Paid By Germany Under Dawes Plan.

BERLIN, Sept. 15. — (Canadian Press). — Germany's total reparations payments during the first year of operation of the Dawes plan amounted to 1,458,000,000 gold marks or about $291,600,000, it was announced yesterday.

Out of this sum the Agent General for Reparations paid to various allied creditors 893,500,000 gold marks.

FRANCE PLANS STEP TO CLEAN EUROPE'S FINANCIAL DOMICILE BY AN ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Measure Provides For Appointment of Committee to Study Prosperity's Obstacles.

AIM PERMANENT PEACE

Pointed Out That Countries Endeavour to Attain Industrial Isolation.

GENEVA, Sept. 16. — (Canadian Press).—Just as the Geneva protocol was the dramatic and outstanding product of the Assembly of the League of Nations last year, there is this year a rapidly growing conviction that France's initiative launched yesterday for a great international economic conference may develop as the most important single act of the present Assembly.

The French project was discussed eagerly last night by all the delegations as the next logical step in world reconstruction and as a timely sequence to the Brussels financial conference of 1920, which laid down a doctrine for international financial adjournment, which served as a basis for the reconstruction of Austria and Hungary and paved the way for a settlement of reparations.

Now that the inter-allied debts and the debts to the United States are on the way to a settlement and the currency of Europe has been stabilized, the experts gathered at Geneva are of the opinion that Europe's financial house is nearing order and that the psychological moment has arrived to take up economic problems on a broad international basis.

The French resolution for the convocation of an international economic conference was introduced by M. Loucheur. It provides for the appointment by the League Council of a committee to make preparations for such a conference with the collaboration of the League's technical organizations and the International Labor Bureau. This committee is to study "the economic differences standing in the way of the restoration of general prosperity, and the best methods of surmounting those difficulties and of avoiding disputes."

There is a pronounced belief on the part of the delegates that economic security in really more important than political security, soon to be taken up with Germany, because it is the clash of economic forces that makes for war. This thought was voiced notably by M. De Brouckers, of Belgium, yesterday afternoon before the Disarmament Commission of the Assembly when backing the French conference proposal.

SCORNED BARGAIN RESULTS IN THEFT

OMEMEE, Sept. 16.—Chicken thieves have again invaded this vicinity and escaped with their desired number of birds. On Saturday evening last, while the Brandon family were in the village, two men made a search of the premises. When their son, Milton, arrived home the men approached him and offered $1 apiece for two hens. Then, seeing their offer was not accepted, they raised the price to $1.50 per hen. Milton still refused, stating they had none for sale. In the morning they were shocked to find the lock taken from the henhouse door, twelve hens stolen and the gates lying open. No clue to the robbery has been located.

HORSE KILLED IN LEAP FROM BARN

Rushed Ahead of Team With Load and Plunged Through Open Door.

OMEMEE, Sept. 16.—Mr. Joseph Bradley had the misfortune to lose his valuable chestnut driving mare last week. The animal, in company with her foal, had been brought in from the pasture to be prepared to show at the fall fairs. On seeing the team of horses go into the barn with a load of grain, she rushed in also, and without stopping jumped into the open. Her fall was somewhat broken by the straw stack which was level with the barn floor, but in some manner her neck was broken. Her foal, who followed, escaped unhurt.

JAIL AUTO AIDS PRISON ESCAPE

Six Bank Bandits, Held For Extradition, Make Clean Get Away.

USE REVOLVERS.

SEATTLE, Wn., Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Six prisoners, including T. H. Johnson and James Burns, held pending extradition to Canada in connection with the $42,000 Royal Bank robbery at Nanimo, last December, escaped from the King County Jail this morning. The men forged their way out by using two revolvers and a knife, and made their escape in an automobile owned by the jail.

Alvin Kilbourne, held on a robbery charge in connection with the holding up of the State Bank of Bothwell last June, when two of his companions were recaptured, also got away.

KID M'COY WILL HAVE NEW TRIAL

Former Prize Fighter, Now in San Quentin, Won His Appeal.

Manslaughter Charge.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 16—Norman Selby, former prize fighter known as Kid McCoy, today won his fight for a new trial on a charge of manslaughter for which he is serving a term in San Quentin Prison. He was convicted in connection with the killing of Mrs. Theresa Mors here in August, 1924.

The second district court of appeals held that the failure of the convicting court to inform the jury that the admissions, statements or confessions of the defendant could not be considered by them for any purpose having to do with proof of the corpus delicti, until they were satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the fact of such violated the rights of McCoy.

McCoy, at first charged with murdering the wife of Albert Mors, wealthy antique dealer, finally was convicted on the manslaughter charge after a jury had deliberated for sixty-eight hours. A second trial followed, in which McCoy was found guilty of assault, intent to commit murder and grand larceny. These were the outgrowth of a shooting orgy the prize fighter staged on the morning Mrs. Mors' body, shot through the head, was found in the apartment which she and McCoy had occupied as man and wife.

SPANIARDS PLOT KRIM'S CONQUEST

Must Capture Two Moroccan Strongholds to Consolidate Position.

KRIM WILL WITHDRAW.

GIBRALTAR, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The first objective of the Spanish forces in the Alhucemas Bay zone, when they actually begin their advance on Ajdir, the capital of Abd-El-Krim, will be the two Moroccan strongholds of Adrar Sellum and Rocosa. Against these points it is planned for the Spaniards to advance from their actual base at Cebadilla Beach and at two points on Morro and Nuevo, all these points being on the Bay of Alhucemas.

The capture of Adrar Sellum and Rocosa is absolutely indispensable for the Spaniards, it is said, for otherwise they will be unable to dominate with any precision the beach of Suani and Ajdir with their guns. Unless they are able to do this any advance on Ajdir would be attended by serious danger.

It is reported that Abd-El-Krim, in the event that Ajdir is captured by the Spaniards, intends to withdraw with the bulk of his tribesmen into mountain fastnesses, where he is supposed to have prepared strongly fortified camps.

MASSEY SAYS THIS ELECTION IS CRUCIAL

National Problems Should Be Viewed in Terms of National Welfare.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—Vincent Massey, whose acceptance of a position in the Mackenzie King Cabinet was announced yesterday, in an interview today said: "I believe this election to be one of the most crucial in the history of Canada; crucial because the very unity of the country is at stake.

"We as Canadians have it in our power in the coming crisis to demonstrate our ability to view the national problems in terms of the national welfare, rather than in the light of sectional interest. If we fail the national structure will be weakened.

"I believe that the Government of Mr. King has presented a program which can be regarded as national in the fullest sense of the term.

"The vexed question of the tariff is to be dealt with for the first time as an economic question to be submitted to continuous scientific investigation."

Blue-jay is the delightful way to end a corn. A tiny cushion, cool as velvet, fits over the corn—relieving the pressure. The pain stops at once. Soon the corn goes. Blue-jay leaves nothing to guess-work. You do not have to decide how much or how little to put on. Each downy plaster is a complete standardized treatment, with just the right amount of the magic medication to end the corn.

The dainty woman does not KEEP Corns

Almost every woman spends hours every week in the care of her face—cold-creaming it, cleansing it, massaging it, to guard against the tiniest blemish. . . . But that doesn't prove her daintiness. It may merely indicate pride and vanity. . . . The real proof of perfect daintiness is the care a woman takes of the things that are not seen. . . . A blemish on her foot is as objectionable to her as one on her face. The moment a corn appears, she applies a Blue-jay. At once the pain goes, in 48 hours the corn goes too.

THE QUICK AND GENTLE WAY TO END A CORN

MARITIMES HEAR LAUDING WORDS FROM MEIGHEN

Commends Their Raising Banner of Revolt Against Government.

WHAT CAN BE DONE.

Said Railway Problem Was Becoming Worse—"Even Baffling."

HALIFAX, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press). — Mr. Meighen expressed pleasure at being back in the Maritime provinces. His pleasure was enhanced by the fact that two years ago Halifax had "raised the banner of revolt against the government and given the signal to the rest of Canada by sending down to Ottawa such a distinguisher representative as Mr. Black." He predicted the return of Mr. Black at the next election.

"I am told that down in the Maritime Provinces party labels don't count for much," said Mr. Meighen. Disappointment, he understood, reigned in regard to the association of Confederation. "None of the factors in Canadian politics has engaged my attention to the extent of the Maritime problems," He did not come with a solution of the problems, but he hoped to indicate the lines which should be followed in finding a solution of the difficulties from which they suffered. "I'm not going to promise what can't be done," he said, "but I shall try to indicate what can be done."

The transportation problem in Canada today was becoming worse and "even baffling," said the Conservative leader. With two great transportation systems, one of them brought into being by the failure of a number of roads which had behind them the guarantee of the government. The Canadian National did not pay. As a matter of fact in the last two years $234,000,000 had been added to the debt of the system which was three-quarters of the debt of Canada before the war.

"The debt of the railway system is just as much the debt of you and me as if we had signed its notes," declared Mr. Meighen. This government did not tell the people.

"The truth of the matter is this," said the speaker. "We owe in two years $234,000,000 more than we did and we must pay for it out of taxes or railway revenues."

There had been a measure of relief in rates for the West which was "utterly undefensible," said Mr. Meighen. The government by legislation, had granted the Crow's Nest rates on grain and flour to the West, and in this way "rivetted" the high rates prevailing onto the Maritime Provinces.

His policy in the matter of railway rates was summarized as follow: "The rates fixed should be fair to the roads and fair to the public, but having done that, then there should be a portion of these rates paid for the benefit of the outlying parts of the country from the general treasury of the nation. By that, you will tie the Maritime Provinces closer to union, and the Dominion as a whole will share the geographical burden which, under present conditions, the Maritimes and Western Provinces share themselves."

Mr. Meighen charged the government with adopting a method which was utterly indefensible" in legislating for reduced rates on grain and flour in the West." This had been granted at the expense of other parts of Canada, and as a result the high rates prevailing were "rivited" on the Maritime Provinces. He reviewed the situation of the Canadian National Railways, claiming that they had been saddled by the government with a debt of $234,000,000 in two years time. He advocated withholding money for further capital investment, and the institution of "a careful and scrupulously honest management."

A reference to the appointment of Vincent Massey to the government featured the speech.

"It is very easy for Mr. Massey, having secured immunity, while others suffered, to make the grand stand play of entering the government," Mr. Meighen said. Implement manufacturers had not been the ones hit by the reduction in duties on agricultural implements but the makers of those commodities entering into the manufacture of implements had suffered seriously.

RADIOLA

Yesterday, we talked about enjoying the out-of-doors when it is raining. It is no use wasting space trying to make it seem attractive. It all depends upon how much sunshine you have inside yourself, and how really curious you are about conditions afield when it is raining. He who stands downcast in the rain, is bound to be soaked with gloom. He who looks into the face of rain, as into a book, and walks afield, turning the pages, reading the chapters, learning the story, is bound to be filled with the finer things of life.

Now that we have that off our chests, lets' go up the river and see what all the fuss was about, when those campers came upon that moose, which had become a prisoner, due to its foot getting caught in a dead and waterlogged tree crotch, near the shallows, where the waterlilies grow.

With the help of Excelsior, my guide, I paddled up the river and landed in on the campers, just as they were frying a nice batch of brook trout. I could smell the wood smoke of their camp fire, away down the river. When the cook quietly added the three remaining trout to the lot to be cooked, I admitted that we would remain for supper.

It seems that they picked this spot as a camping place, due to the moose. A huge animal too, half lying in the shallow water, exhausted with yanking and pulling at his leg. He seemed to have brains enough to keep from breaking it anyway. He was gone by the time we got there, but they tell me that he was nearly gone in another sense altogether, when they came upon him, for he was so weak that he just looked at them with big sad eyes, made a brief effort or two, as if to show them he was stuck fast, and let them come close and investigate.

Did you ever place two fingers across two fingers and play "put your finger in the crow's nest?" Well, two dead tree crotches lay that way, and he stepped into it with his hind foot. Slowly, by degrees, our campers moved the top dead crotch back, then pulled him forward, by the horns. When he felt his leg free from the squeezing, he shook them off, weakly, waded wearily ashore and, giving them a tired and wondering look, disappeared. What was he thinking?

Where a Woman's Sacrifice Is Still Honored

In the city of Coventry, England, a famous pageant has been held, intermittently, during the past two hundred years, in commemoration of a woman's superb sacrifice. The celebration is that of Lady Godiva's Procession.

The story of Lady Godiva is based on history and was first recorded early in the Fourteenth Century by Matthew of Westminster, in this manner:

"This Countess (Godiva) devoutly anxious to free the city of Coventry from a base and grievous thraldom, often besought the Count, her husband, that he would liberate it from such servitude. But he rebuked her for demanding a thing so injurious to himself and forbade her to move further therein.

"Yet she continued to press the matter insomuch that she obtained this answer from him: 'Ascend' said he 'thy horse, naked and pass through the city from one end of it to the other in sight of the people, and on thy return thou shalt obtain thy request.' Upon which she returned. 'And should I be willing to do this, wilt thou give me leave?' 'I will' he responded.

"Then the Countess Godiva, beloved of God, ascended her horse, naked, loosing her long hair, which clothed her entire body except her snow-white legs and having performed the journey, seen by none, returned with joy to her husband, who, regarding it as a miracle, thereupon granted Coventry a Charter of Freedom, confirming it with his seal."

There is one unpleasant note associated with Lady Godiva's sacrificial ride through the streets, and that is more or less of a myth. When the proclamation went forth that the Lady Godiva would ride through the streets naked, in order to free her beloved people, every man, woman and child in Coventry hid themselves within their homes at the appointed time for her journey, so the story goes, except "one low churl." This was "Peeping Tom" who was supposed to be a tailor. It was he who dared to look slyly upon the Lady Godiva. One legend has it that as soon as he placed his eye to the crack of the door through which he hoped to see the Lady Godiva that he was stricken blind. Since that time various effigies of "Peeping Tom" have been devised. Hideous images in stone, wood, porcelain and wax are always much in evidence on August 2, the date of the celebration.

The commemoration at different times fell into disfavor and something of disrepute was attached to the festival, when commercialism stepped in. However, there is always in the hearts of the people of England, a feeling of reverence for the beautiful countess, who so loved her people that she agreed to basely humiliate herself to save them..

CALL STRIKE AGAIN.

Reason Said to be Relief of Non-Union Miners.

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—A second call for a general strike of miners in the Northern West Virginia coal fields, to become effective September 25, was issued yesterday by Van A. Bittner, international representative of the United Mine Workers in that region. The first call addressed to non-union miners was made April 1.

Bittner said yesterday's call was issued because the union believed a majority of the non-union men were dissatisfied with wages and working conditions, and that they desired to join the union.

Announcement was also made that President John L. Lewis and other international officers of the mine workers will come to Fairmont September 26 to address a miners' mass meeting.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

THE ADVICE OF A CENTENARIAN.

A few weeks ago I went to Michigan to help an uncle celebrate his birthday. Born in 1825 he has lived on the same farm and there enjoyed a hundred birthdays.

I purposely used the word "enjoyed," because it exactly expresses the emotions of this old young man, or should I say, this young old man? He has enjoyed every one of his birthdays.

In 1869, when he was forty-four, my uncle had a barn "raising." It was his fancy to lay a corner-stone. Upon this were inscribed the usual things and then these words appear: "Pay as you go."

The other day Uncle insisted that we should go to see this stone and he orated to us, the assembled family, upon the virtues of the inscription and the importance of its teaching. He made it the text of a remarkable sermon.

"Worry over money has shortened many a life," he said. "If you worry, you can't sleep. If you can't sleep, you can't eat. If you don't eat you get sick.

"Pay as you go and you have nothing to worry about. One of the reasons I have lived to be a hundred is because I practised that rule all my life."

As we sat out on the lawn, discussing matters of state, of family, of locality, of the crops, I looked upon the centenarian and then surveyed the group gathered about the venerable man. How many of them will live to be a hundred? If they do not, why will they have failed to reach a goal which 3,500 other men and women now living in American have attained?

Naturally my eyes wandered to my own father and mother, eighty-eight and eighty-two, respectively. Will they live to see the century mark?

I don't see why they will not. Their plain eating, the sweet simplicity of their lives, their cheerful outlook on life, their unconscious observance of the rules of hygiene, and, above all else, as uncle insists, their freedom from worry—these practices should continue to preserve to them the good health they have had through their scores of years.

"What man hath done, man can do." We can govern our lives so that we, too, can live to be centenarians.

ANSWERS TO HEALTH QUERIES

W. G. Q.—I stutter horribly. What can I do to overcome this habit?

A.—Try to speak very quietly and lowly. It would be advissble to consult an elocution teacher.

R. T. Q.—Is it necessary to sleep with the windows open?

A.—Yes. It is necessary for health.

J. G. E. Q.—What would cause a pain around the heart? Would this be due to gases in the system?

2.—What should a boy of 19, 5 feet, 7 1-2 inches tall, weigh?

A.—Gases in the system would be apt to cause pains around the heart. Correct this diet and be sure that the intestinal tract is kept clear and you will probably notice improvement. For further particulars send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

2.—He should weigh about 142 pounds.

3.—Build up the general health, and in this way not only benefit your entire system, but gain in weight as well. For further particulars send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

An interesting day may be forecast from the prevailing lunar figure and an element of mystery is hinted by the mutual aspect between the always intriguing planets. Uranus and Neptune, which, according to the science of the stars, promote the unique and unexpected. With Jupiter in most friendly place and Saturn assisting by a sextile to Luna substantial benefits may be looked for, involving increase of money and expansion in business. But concentration and regularity are required.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of growth in business and increase of money if they attend to legitimate affairs with industry and proper judgment. There is a probability of experience or adventures out of the ordinary, with a tinge of the eccentric or irregular. A child born on this day may have splendid talents and equipment, but may have a leaning toward eccentric or unorthodox ventures or experiences.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

DICKY MAKES A QUEER DISCOVERY IN THE POND

Dicky spied the queer looking little purse-like thing down among the weeds near the edge of the pond and finding a stick, was just about to poke it away when a tiny hand caught his arm and held it.

"Goodness, don't poke it away," said a tiny voice, and Dickey turned around to look down into the smiling face of a wee little elfin. "Or you'll make Motther Dog-fish very unhappy.

"Oh, Squeedee ,"Dicky cried excitedly, "is that really and truly Mrs. Dog-fish's eggs? They look for all the world like wee little gray pocketbooks. They are all about an inch wide and two inches long. Why, how in the world did she get them tied so tightly to the weeds."

"She is a very clever little Mother fish," said Squeedee, touching the twig that held all the wee little egg purses. They have four stiff little hairs, one on each corner of the wee bag, and with these stiff hairs, Mother Dog-fish ties her little egg bags to the weeds."

"So I see," laughed Dicky. "But what I can't see, is how does she do that? She hasn't any hands to tie with."

"Very true, she has no hands," replied Squeedee. "But Mother Dog-fish doesn't need hands. She is a clever little Mother fish. She selects a proper kind of weed or limb under the water ,then drops her egg cases and holding tightly to the long stiff hairs on the corners, she swims in and out the twig or weed until those stiff hairs are so tightly wound around that they cannot get away."

"Then I suppose she stays right there and watches them until they hatch," suggested Dickey. But he knew by the strange expression on the elfin's face that something was wrong.

"No, Boy, I'm sorry to say, but Mother Dog-fish doesn't like her babies very well, or maybe, she doesn't want to be bothered with a family. Anyway, just as soon as she has finished laying her eggs, she runs off and never comes back to even see about them. But gracious, it's a good thing she does run away. If she stayed and watched them, she would eat every tiny fish as it hatched."

"My Goodness! Some Mother!" exclaimed Dicky. "I always knew that Dog-fish ate fish all right. For one day I was out fishing and had my fish that I had caught, and when I came down in the water, and when I came to put on a fish I had just caught I say my line, fish and all, sailing through the water, and an ugly looking Dog-fish was carrying it away."

"That's why it's a good thing she runs ..... after she h fastened her eggs to the weeds," laughed Squeedee. "Well, shall we go down the pond and find something new?"

This suited Dicky and taking Squeedee's hand away thy trotted in search of new adventure.

YOUR GARDEN

STORING DAHLIAS AND CANNAS.

The cooler nights remind us that fall is fast approaching and the time of storage of all tender perennials. When autumn frosts have killed the tops of these two perennials, the plants should be taken up at once and allowed to dry a little in the sun. Then cut off the stems so that the stubs of about three inches are left. When this is done they may be more easily stored in a cellar away from frost. Forty to forty-five degrees Fahrenheit will prove very satisfactory. Planting dahlia tubers stems down on shelves and covering them with sand or soil is a good way. Large tubers need not necessarily be covered but may be piled on the shelf or floor preferably with the stems to the outside. A dirt floor is preferable if they are to be piled in heaps. Unless the atmosphere is very dry dahlia tubers should not be watered. Should it prove dry, however, and shrivelling occurs, then give a very light, very occasion sprinkling. A little shrivelling is not detrimental and care should be taken in applying water as a little too much will cause them to mildew.

Cannas should be stored where they can be kept warm. If kept in a cold and damp place they will decay. Under the greenhouse benches is the best place, but lacking one, they may be stored in a suitable part of the cellar. For burying them either sand or soil is suitable but sand is preferable. Should the beds be needed for bulb planting, it is not necessary to leave them until the foliage dies down, though they should be left as long as possible before digging.

SCHOOL FAIR IS MARRED BY RAIN

Attendance and Entries Were Cut Down by Unfavorable Weather.

CARMEL SCHOOL WON

MILLBROOK, Sept. 16.—Unfavorable weather did a great deal to mar the success of the South Cavan Rural School Fair, which was held at Millbrook on Saturday, September 12, the event having been postponed from the previous Thursday owing to intervening attractions.

A steady downpour all morning hindered the bringing in of the usual number of exhibits, and this weather continuing throughout the afternoon, the attendance and interest shown was most encouraging under the circumstances. The use of the large building on the agricultural grounds, instead of the tent, added to the comfort and convenience of the occasion.

Five rural schools, and the two junior rooms of the Millbrook public school are included in the South Cavan district, the list being: Fallis Line, S.S. No. 10, Mrs. W. J. Gardiner, teacher, Verna Fallis, director, appointed from the pupils; Zion, S.S. No. 13, Miss Kathleen Lancashire, teacher, Ted Hard, director; Fairview, S.S. No. 14, Miss L. Stutt, teacher, Sadie Rowland, director; Cork, S.S. No. 15, Miss Mae Earle, teacher, George Martin, director; Carmel, S.S. No. 19, Miss Anna Hawthorne, teacher, Audrey Bristow, director; for Millbrook, which is S.S. No. 11, the teachers are B. B. Dawson, senior room, Burton Russell, director, Miss B. Montgomery, teacher of the junior room, and Eric Clarke, director.

The school parade had to be held in the building, Colonel Odell and Mr. Clarence Allen being the judges. Only three schools participated, and the winners were: Parade: 1, Carmel, Miss Hawthorne, teacher; 2, Cork, Miss Earle, teacher. Physical Culture: 1, Carmel; 2, Cork; 3, Fairview.

Miss Lancashire had her pupils trained for entry in the parade and physical culture exercises, but owing to the inclement weather, only one or two were present. Miss Stutt's pupils looked quite attractive in sailor costumes; Miss Earle had chosen a patriotic design, sashes of red, white and blue being worn, with white caps, bearing the school number in red letters; maple leaves, artistically arranged, gave a pleasing appearance to the pupils from Miss Hawthorne's school. The banners, in each instance, were original in design, and added considerably to the appearance of the school while on parade.

TURKS DENY CHARGE.

Great Britain Averred That Christians Had Been Carried From Mosul.

GENEVA, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—The British accusation before the Council of the League of Nations that Turkish troops had captured and carried off many Christians in the disputed Mosul area was denied by Turkish representatives last night; they declared there were no Christians in the particular district mentioned by the British. They asserted that the British charge was Great Britain's answer to the Turkish offer to negotiate a regional security pact between Turkey, Irak and Persia.

The British statement complains to the Council that the Turkish Government apparently is renewing its policy of systematic removal of all the Christian populations from the territory between the Brussels line and that claimed by Great Britain, and declares that it was owing to similar military movements by Turkey in September, 1924, that the British Government found it necessary to call a special meeting of the Council at Brussels to define precisely the obligations both parties undertook to observe under Article 3 of the Treaty of Lausanne.

The Commissioner at Bagdad, says the statement, also reported on September 12 an exchange of shots between an Itak patrol and a Turkish patrol which crossed the Brussels line. It is admitted the incident is unimportant, but, nevertheless, it is characterized as an unjustifiable violation of the Turkish agreement.

Keep Off The Poles

Warning to Parents

The Peterborough Utilities Commissioners desire to urge the parents of Peterborough to warn their children against the climbing of the system's poles. Apart from the danger of falling, the live wires on the poles make such attempts doubly hazardous to those who are not trained in handling electric wires.

The two recent disastrous accidents to young boys in the city of Toronto also emphasize the dangers of attempting to fly kites within the city. Apart from the interruptions to service and inconvenience to citizens caused by kites becoming entangled among electric wires, there is an element of danger to children who fly them, apart altogether from possibility of their being led to climb the poles with disastrous results.

The citizens are also hereby warned that it is dangerous to attach radio aerials and wires or apparatus of any description to the electric poles of the system. Not only is this dangerous to the citizens, but also the Commission's linemen in the performance of their duties.

MUCH IGNORANCE ABOUT CANADA IN OLD COUNTRY

Bishop Bidwell Was Appalled at Lack of Knowledge Which He Found.

SPOKE AT SYNOD

Cost of Passage to Canada Greater Than That to Antipodes.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—I was appalled almost at the widespread ignorance of Canada which I found in England," His Lordship, Bishop Bidwell, Bishop of Ontario, told a large gathering in St. George's Parish Hall last night. His Lordship was speaking on the question of "migration" and of the new interest which the Church of England in Canada was taking in this work of Empire building.

The gathering was presided over by the Primate of all Canada, His Grace Archbishop Mathewson of Ruperts Land. The Bishop of Ontario spoke as chairman of the delegation which the Canadian Church sent to England during the past summer to confer with the committee which the Church there had appointed to take up the new work of Empire migration. Bishop Bidwell expressed the hope that in future the word "migration" would be used instead of "immigration" which had become somewhat repulsive to many and did not represent the idea of moving from one part of the Empire into another.

The Church in England had awakened to the importance of the proper overseas settlement of Church people in order to relive many conditions existing in the Old Country and in order to do away with a great deal of overlapping among the existing societies.

Bishop Bidwell said he had found that the cost of passage to Canada was a large factor in deterring people from coming here. Despite the six weeks it took to get to Australia the cost of passage there was but 15 pounds, and to New Zealand 12 pounds yet the passage to Canada was 18 pounds.

Peterborough Churches

CHURCH OF THE SACRED HEART.

The growth of the Catholic population of the town and the need of greater accommodation for the congregation than that provided by St. Peter's led to the formation of a new parish at the south end of the town and the corner-stone of the new church was laid in June, 1908.

The building was completed in 1909, and was formally opened by Bishop O'Connor of Peterboro, assisted by local clergy and by Archbishop McEvay of Toronto, a former rector of St. Peter's; Bishop Scollard of Sault Ste. Marie, an old resident of Ennismore, and the Rev. Dr. Bourke of Toronto. The Rev. Dr. J. J. O'Brien acted as master of ceremonies. After the church had been declared open, it was intimated that the Rev. Dr. O'Brien had been appointed priest of the new church, and to his care had been committed the charge of the new parish. The success that attended the efforts of Dr. O'Brien in the church, and, later, throughout the diocese, is now a matter of common knowledge.

Erected on an ample site at the intersection of Aylmer and Romaine Streets, the Church of the Sacred Heart is in Romanesque style of architecture, of Stoney Lake granite with a rich brown tint that lends a picturesque effect to a dignified and charming edifice.

Specially noteworthy is the fine pipe organ donated by Martin McManus in memory of his wife and daughter. The organ was inaugurated on May 19, 1914. Mr. John Armstrong, who presided, playing in such a manner as to give assurance that the new instrument was in the hands of a master musician. The religious nature of the occasion was signafied by Pontifical Mass.

The organ, which is placed in the gallery, was built by Sasavent Fréres, St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, and presents a splendid appearance, is artistically finished, and adds greatly to the appearance of the church interior. It is what is known as a tubular pneumatic doubled bank organ. The wind is supplied by an electric motor.

The Rev. J. J. O'Brien, formerly of Lakefield, a native of Peterboro, and a class-mate of Bishop O'Brien, was appointed pastor of the Sacred Heart Church on October 1, 1913.

FLOWER SHOW IS BEAUTY SPOT AT PETERBORO FAIR

Display of Gladiolius By Cedar Nurseries is High Light.

BIG TENT FULL

Amateurs and Florists Have Shown Great Interest in Show.

The beauty spot of the Exhibition is the flower show and its high light is the profusion of primulinums and gladioli displayed by the Cedar Nurseries of Whitby. Nearly one thousand spikes of glorious blooms were brought by motor to the city this morning by R. L. James, who is in charge of this display which has been highly praised by J. H. Callander, D. Jordan, W. H. Young and other local growers of "gladies."

"We have several purposes in coming to Peterboro Exhibition," Mr. James said to the Examiner. "The Canadian Gladiolus Society are holding their show here next year and as specialists in this flower we wished to call attention now to next year's show and also to popularize the flower itself. The Gladiolus show will, in its way, be a big thing for Peterboro and give a fresh impetus to the growth of gladioli by the general public."

This nursery is showing in the florists' class and in the class for not less than ten varieties, and their display should be seen by every flower lover attending the Fair.

There is a noticeable omission in the flower show this year, Jordan Brothers having withheld their usual bank and design work.

"We've heard criticisms that the flower show was a one man affair," Dave Jordan remarked to the Examiner, "We heard it in the past so we decided to stay out this year if there is any feeling that we were trying to monoopliz any part of the flower department."

The exhibit of flowers fills the big tent, and directors are grateful for the interest local amateurs have shown especially in view of the fact that the season has not been favorable for finishing flowers for exhibition.

ATTACKS MORALS.

Labor Convention Hears Indictment of University of Illinois.

URBANA, Ill., September 16. Canadian Press. — A challenge to the University of Illinois officials to show that they are not harboring what he styled "subsidized vice," was thrown down in the state Federation of Labor Convention here this morning by Edwin R. Wright of Chicago, a former state president.

Mr. Wright painted a lurid picture of "fraternity house morality."

"Better burn the universities to the ground," he said, "then pay them money, if our sons and daughters attend them to learn immorality."

SAKLATVALA HAS NO INTENTION OF ATTACKING U.S.A.

Communist Member Expects to Meet With No Difficulty in Gaining Entry.

CAN'T BE KEPT HOME.

Home Secretary Says He Would Be Stopped if There Were Power.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—S. Saklatvala, Communist member of the House of Commons, to-day told press correspondents that he had not the slightest intention of attacking United States institutions while in the United States as a delegate to the Inter-Parliamentary Union Congress. Mr. Saklatvala will sail on the steamer Caronia September 19.

He scouted the idea of being refused admission into the United States on account of his political beliefs, and pointed out that he had had no trouble in getting his British passport, vized by the United States Consul-General in London. He said he had attended the Inter-Parliamentary conference in Copenhagen in 1923, with complete liberty, and that since then his well-known political views had not changed.

Mr. Saklatvala has no set speeches prepared on any subject, but he declared he would not hesitate to raise his voice when opportunity offered against Imperialism and the economic exploitation of colored subject races which he has charged.

Can't Be Kept Home.

If the Secretaryof State for Home Affairs, Sir William Joynson-Hicks, had power to prevent Shapurji Saklatvala, Communist member of the British House of Commons, from making the trip to the United States and Canada with a party of delegates from the Empire Parliamentary Association, he would not hesitate a moment, the Daily Graphic quotes the Minister as saying in an interview.

Sir William declared that Saklatvala was going to America to create mischief, adding, "I have no doubt at all that a quite definite attempt is being made in close touch with Moscow to destroy the British constitution."

The Home Secretary intimated that, if necessary, further powers to put down sedition would be sought.

It was reported this afternoon that a string of entries may arrive to-mororw from Oshawa, but it was not definitely known this afternoon whether they would come.

Active Buying Was Cause Of Gains In Wheat Price

Chicago, Sept. 16. Can. Press.— Although wheat prices opened lower to-day, the market quickly scored gains. Active buying on the part of houses with eastern connections had much to do with the upturn in values and so likewise did reports of decreased arrivals from the domestic spring crop in the North west. On the other hand, unexpected weakness of Liverpool quotations together with an estimate that the French wheat crop is 46,000,000 bushels larger than last year's total, was more or less responsible for the initial decline here.

Chicago opening prices ¾ to 1 1-8c lower; December 149½ to 149 3-4, and May 152½ to 153, were followed by a rise that lifted December to 151 1-8 and May to 154¼.

Corn was easier, influenced by advices that the bulk of the corn crop is safe from the frost. After opening at ¾c off to 1-8c up, December 83¼ to 83½, the corn market underwent a moderate general sag.

Oats took their cue from wheat rather than from corn. Starting unchanged to 1-8c higher, December 41 3-4, oats held near to initial figures. Provisions lacked support.

Stock Prices Strengthen After Yesterday's Break

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press). — Stock prices gained strength as trading progressed in to-day's Wall Street market. The apparent inability of bear traders to force a further re-action on top of yesterday's sharp break,, coupled with an easing of call money rates and hardening metal prices, stimulated pool activities in a wide assortment of shares.

Motors, equipments, public utilities, and merchandizing issues gave the best demonstrations of group strength. General Motors crossed par from the first time since the re-capitalization of the company. Before the end of the third hour, Chrysler had extended its gain to 7½ points, Mack Trucks to 4 3-4, American Can. to 6, and General Electric and Fisher Body to three points or more. Trading was in somewhat smaller volume, although the million-share mark was crossed before one o'clock.

Recessions Featured Day On Toronto Mine Exchange

TORONTO, September 16. — Canadian Press. — Recessions large and small figured in dealings on the Standard mining exchange this morning, with a good volume of trading taking place. Teck Hughes and Premier—the latter in light transactions—suffered most, the former dropping four at 189, and Premier nine at 237.

Crown Reserve eased down point and Lorrain one and an eighth.

On the other side Vipond advanced 1. Hunton a ½, and Barry-Hollinger 3-4.

Weakness Set In To-day On Toronto Stock Market

TORONTO, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press.— A fair amount of activity was displayed on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning, but a change of tone was shown when some weakness set in. Brazilian, again the leader, eased down on eight at 73 5-8, and F. N. Burt Common 7-8 at 62. Consolidated Smelters dropped a half at 117 1-2, and the Canadian Canners issues were fractionally easier, both Common and Preferred Exceptions were Atlantic Sugar, which sold up 5-8 to 3, and Canada Steamships Preferred, which advanced a like amount at 52 1-8.

PROPERTY COMMISSION.

First Hearing of Ontario Churches at Stratford Next Week.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press). — According to tentative plans announced by Chairman Falconbridge, the Ontario Church Property Commission will hold its first public hearing at Stratford Friday, September 25th. The Commission will hold a meeting at Osgoode Hall on Friday next, when an itinerary will be laid out as far as possible.

WELL-MERITED SUCCESS

A distinguished citizen, honored politically and professionally, Dr. R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, made a success few have equalled. His pure herbal remedies which have stood the test for fifty years are still among the "best sellers." Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a blood medicine and stomach alterative. It clears the skin, beautifies it, increases the blood supply and the circulation, and pimples and eruptions vanish quickly. Beauty is but skin deep and good blood is beneath both. For your blood to be good, your stomach must be in condition, your liver active. This Discovery of Doctor Pierce's puts you in fine condition, with all the organs active. Ask your nearest druggist for Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, in tablet or liquid form, or send 10 cents for trial package of tablets to Dr. Pierce's Laboratory in Bridgeburg, Ontario.

The car that put the War in Warren

JIM WARREN bought a car—the "Ginger-bread Six."

Never heard of it before, but he happened to be walking along Automobile Row and during a lapse moment his foot slipped—he stepped inside.

"Nifty boat," said the salesman.

"Not bad," said Jim, as paint and doo-dabs got in their hypnotic work.

"But why isn't it advertised?" asked Jim.

"Don't need to advertise a job like that," was the forearmed reply. Sounded logical. But—

Six months later Jim had a collection of bolts and grease-cups and broken springs and disjointed steering mechanism and a motor that almost ran.

"Never again!" said Jim. "The car that's little known and never advertised hasn't much responsibility; little to live up to. Before I buy another car—or another anything—I'm going to get the facts. I'm going to read the advertisements about automobiles—or whatever I'm buying."

Advertisements are an invaluable guide to intelligent buying. Read them regularly

VERNEY—HUTCHISON

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—Walmer Road Baptist Church was the scene of a very quiet and pretty wedding on Saturday, September 12, at 3.30 o'clock, when Alma Lorraine, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Hutchison, of Millbrook, Ont., became the bride of Mr. Jas. G. Verney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Verney, 564 Manning Ave., Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. J. Vining. The bride was becomingly attired in a beautiful frock of cinnamon brown georgette with hat to match, and carried a corsage bouquet of Prenet roses and lily of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Mabel K. Hutchison also of Toronto, who wore a charming gown of Sonora crepe with sand trimmings. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Geo. Verney. Immediately following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Verney left, amid showers of confetti, on the 4.20 train for Washington and Eastern points. WHAT PRICE LUXURY?

By Juanita Hamel

Too high a price, little lady, as you'll find to your sorrow. That is, if Love is thrown aside. Of course, it's a wonderful thing to think you'll be able to gratify every whim of your heart, but after your every luxurious desire has been gratified—then what? It will be an empty life at best, a constant searching for Something, anything with which to fill the empty, idle hours. Then you'll wish with all your heart that you had listened to the promptings of Love instead of Luxury. But it will be too late. You'll be just like a doll—gorgeously gowned, beautifully bejeweled, daintily scented, but that's all. A chattel to be exhibited with the rest of the gorgeousness with which you'll be surrounded Then you'll wish with all your heart for the "bread and cheese and kisses," which you threw aside when luxury dazzled your poor little head.

FURS IN VOUGE

Fur collars and cuffs and fur banding to hems continue to be a noticeable element in the fall styles in coats for women. Sable dyed oppossum and sealine (dyed rabbit) are popular in these trimmings, with a tendency toward interrupting the fur-banded hemline, some of the models showing fur-banded flaring-side panels, while others incline to the fur-banded back line only.

Suedine is good for fall wear, with velours a close second, and a novelty shown in the self-striped Flamingo cloth. Sleeves incline to the fairly tight variety, with moderately flaring cuffs, and a good deal of braid stitching is used.

Tweeds, in grey and tans, are used in the double-breasted English type coat, with slightly gored sides, back vent and small velvet collars or collars of self material. Inset pockets are much in evidence.

For the youthful wearers, duvetype and velour and Bolivia cloth are popular with coney and sealine for trimmings. Bolivia cloth in mulberry and ginger snap brown develops a model with military trimness to the reversible coney collar that may be buttoned high about the throat, and fur on the cuffs and side panels. Side godets introducing a slight flare, and narrow slanting cloth straps with deep sections of fur beneath, buttons with peaked flaps and fur tabs, deep rows of military braid, all combine as unusual effects on the fall coats, which come in mulberry, gingersnap brown, almond, castor, tortoiseshell and rosewood.

In the fur coat lines, Hudson and electric seal, Persian lamb and Texas muskrat are popular, with frequent use of contrasting fur trimmings. A coat of fine silver muskrat that suggests a flare has a deep border of coon oppossum fur, with crushable shawl collar and cuffs of the same, while Alaska sable (dyed skunk) and grey and brown squirrel form the collars and cuffs of other models, lined with fancy crepes, brocades and damasks.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of fourteen. I am in love with a real nice boy. He goes to the same school as I do. He is jealous because another boy brings me home sometimes. I really don't care for the second, but do not want to give in to feel him so. Mother objects to my going with boys, so what would you advise me to do? Do you really think that I am too young to have boy friends? Please answer soon.

DOUBTFUL.

DOUBTFUL: Yes, I certainly think that you are much too young to have boy friends of this age, who are showing jealousy about each other. One thing at a time is a good rule. How are you going to pay proper attention to your studies if you are thinking of beaus at fourteen years of age? The type of boy who is going to be a real man in the future isn't thinking of girls or jealousy either at fourteen or fifteen years of age, so your friends are most likely of the sissy sort. I am certainly of the opinion that your mother is right. You will have plenty of time later on to think of love and jealousy. Why not be a real little lady, and forget such things until you are able to gauge them at their proper value.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I have been keeping company with a young man and have been engaged for over two months, and we have had a quarrel, and I have asked him to come back and he won't come back. Which is proper—should I return the ring or keep it? What should I do?

FLOSSIE.

FLOSSIE: Why not wait a little while and see if you don't make up your differences. Two months isn't very long to be engaged. Of course, if you commence quarrelling so early in the game, probably you are not suited to each other, but in any case, don't be too hasty. Perhaps you have offended the young man so deeply that he doesn't want to come back just yet, but he may later. Of course, if he was at fault, and you have tried to make up, and he refuses to be reconciled, the only thing you can do is to return his ring. But wait and see.

HEDDA HOYT TALKS ABOUT THINGS THAT INTEREST THE BUSY WOMAN OF 1925

Sports Clothes

(Written for the United Press)

NEW YORK, Sept. 16 (United Press).—By far the smartest clothes one sees during these last weeks of Summer are sports clothes. Flowered chiffon frocks became so plentiful that one no longer notices them. Larger transparent hats of pastel shades have likewise passed out of the horizon. Sports ensembles and hats are the only ones which manage to look new at the passing of Summer.

At the nearby resorts, at tennis matches, boat races and club gatherings, the smart woman is sure to be found wearing sports clothes. White has perhaps more followers than colors. There are numerous white coats of full or three-quarter length of French flannel, brushed wool, kasha or brasket weave topping gowns of white crepe de chene or matching fabric.

White fox very often forms the collar and in some cases is used on the wide cuffs. Shoes and hosiery are also white although nude hosiery is still popular with some. White velour or felt hats of semi-cloche shape are those most frequently worn with the white outfit although an occasional red or yellow velour is seen.

Brilliant lip-stick red adds a touch of color at smart gatherings. At the Long Island motorboat races no less than twenty red coats were noted. Brown topcoats on mannish lines with red scarfs or red trimmings are new and will because of their Autumn coloring be carired over until Fall.

One of the prettiest sports outfits using brown tones was worn by a popluar matron at a recent tennis match. Her full-length coat of brown suede was collared and cuffed in leopard fur. This was worn over a Chinese crepe frock figured in brown. Her hat was of brown velour. Accompanying her was a young Miss in a yellow kashi coat, yellow felt hat and yellow frock. Another smart young Miss wore a white broadcloth coat with lapels to the hemline of dark mink fur. Her hat was a small brown velour.

One sees numerous coats of cretonne often embroidered in gold stitchery. These, however, are being replaced as Fall draws near by coats made of Indian blankets.

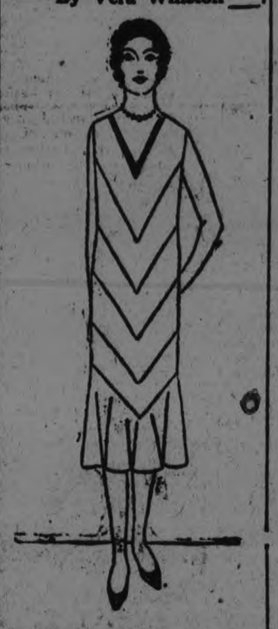
TODAY'S FASHION

By Vera Winston



A Black Satin Frock with Interesting Seams and Colored Embroidery at the Neck.

Although there are so many new and lovely colors for Fall, the black frock still holds its own. It usually adds a bit of color interest in a single touch, as seen in the gay braid that outlines the V neck of frock above.

The material is black satin. The dress is cut so that there is a series of pointed seams at the front and at the back. The bottom is finished with a circular flare.

The sleeves are long and tight and the only color is in the wool embroidery at the neck.

Principal uses of Bon Ami—for cleaning and polishing

Aluminium Ware, Bathtubs, Tiling, Fine Kitchen Utensils, White Woodwork, Brass, Copper and Nickel Ware, Glass Baking Dishes, Windows, Mirrors, Refrigerators, White Shoes, The Hands, Linoleum and Congoleum

Cake or Powder whichever you prefer

Made in Canada

Scratches—even tiny ones—catch the dirt and make the brass, nickel or copper waste harder to clean next time. Bon Ami absorbs all the grime and tarnish, and polishes to a glistening lustre without the slightest scratching.

Just sprinkle the fine powder or rub the Bon Ami Cake on a damp cloth. (Never use the cake direct.) Then apply the soft lather. When the lather dries, a few rubs with a clean, dry cloth will instantly bring back the mirror-like sheen.

Bon Ami cleans and polishes dozens of things about the house with the same wonderful ease. Note the list above. And Bon Ami never reddens or roughens your hands.

RAIN DIDN'T STOP CROWD AT THE EX.

Everybody Happy in Spite of Drizzle at Downpour Last Night

[illegible] the stages. Well put now the vaults of many millions in the vaults, might have been the sight also of the dreamers of the Peterboro Fair last night as they watched the rain-drops fall in their thousands in front the rides. But, despite the wet, it was a jovial crowd that took advantage of the free admission night to give the mammoth Midway the "once over." They viewed the smiling bewpie dolls, cheerful in a stately ostrich feather outfit, even in such moist surroundings, they regarded the wonders of the cow with the corkscrew leg and the Siamese twin calves, they shivered over the gruesome wax features of Ruth Burnam, the Alabama Waif, and the blood-stained visage of Harry Tracy, and they had a good time in Jess's Bungalow, the house of mirth.

The car that never goes dry, and responds with obliging liquid refreshment to the "gold-digger" incantation of its owner, was a source of wonderment, also the young gentleman who served as "barker" for this show, and has an entirely new line on the way of calls. He says "Hallahalla" and "Hawaii" at the top of his voice, with an agonized intonation that appears to hypnotize his audience, and he has a side-partner in a youth with a calliope whistle. The two call attention to the Cocoon Girl and the tattooed lady and the dime-[illegible] show, along with a host of other attractions.

The crowd at the races seemed, as [illegible] as it used to be called, [illegible] of the time never stop there [illegible], a luxurious affair with wonderfully painted horses and a top to protect from the rain, played "Over the Waves," probably considering this an appropriate selection.

Over in the collection of side shows that adorn the Midway, Ollie Bill and Bimpy Boy, the fat ladies [illegible] in seclusion, and the Gaiety palace, a miniature revue and musical comedy, showed a procession all over front of the gate. [illegible] were lines of chorus [illegible] including one where a dark [illegible] movie manner, evidently [illegible] something to do with the [illegible] of the game.

Guess and Taxation.

It is a fascinating [illegible] year. All empty spaces must be filled up. Where the [illegible] come from nobody knows, but they do, filled with decorative motifs [illegible] one can imagine just how nice a [illegible] place of sliced [illegible] and [illegible] with layers of [illegible] [illegible], and all ready to be [illegible] of dining out a evening. Nothing stale [illegible] are here, and they patronize the [illegible] fair. They are dieters [illegible] cream and [illegible] hot dogs for [illegible] can go for a [illegible] excursion or for a [illegible] the "Merry Mix" [illegible] spend some small [illegible] for a kewpie or a rag [illegible] knife. There is [illegible] every minute. The [illegible] treat go far as the [illegible] corner, has more the appearance of a real carnival than ever before, so one can miss a good time [illegible].

Although the Al Sweet [illegible] Band did not perform last evening, on account of the very bad weather and small crowd, the men were on hand, a weary-looking outfit, all ready for to-day's programme. The Canadian Fire Band, led by Pipe-Major J. Smith, braved the rain and played for about an hour in the small stand near the eastern entrance, entertaining their audience with real Scotch music from real Scotch pipes, played by real Scotch musicians.

An adjunct to the cheerful atmosphere of the Fair is the really wonderful arrangement of electric lights. Overhead are myriads of colored globes, making a beautiful illumination, the main entrance is draped in a gigantic collection of green lights and everywhere through the [illegible] are hundreds of globes, making a truly cosmopolitan and fairy-like effect to the grounds.

A SIGNIFICANT UNION

The Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, and his new cabinet colleague, Hon. Vincent Massey, are seen above as they appeared upon the occasion of a recent visit paid to Earl Grey, Governor-General, by the former. The inclusion of Mr. Massey in the Liberal ministry without portfolio is doubly significant in view of the fact that he is president of the Massey-Harris Company, Limited, one of the firms which it was said in 1924 would be in danger of being ruined by the tariff reductions on agricultural implements introduced by Hon. James Robb on behalf of the Liberal government.

INSURANCE MEN OFF TO MEETING

Thirteen Agents of Sun Life in This District Are Club Members.

HONORS FOR ONE.

In these days when many records are being broken, it is interesting to note the progress of one of the leading life assurance companies. During this week the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada holds a convention at St. Andrews, Man., at which the leading producers of the company, east of Manitoba, will meet. In General Insurance district no less than thirteen of the company's representatives have earned the right to attend the convention. The following are the names of the agents who with J. F. H. Wallace, the local manager, and W. H. Hill, left for the east last night, where they will join the main Sun Life party at Montreal, and proceed by special train to their destination: Messrs. J. D. Cameron, Peterborough; F. J. Hitsley, Peterborough; J. F. Winthey, Belleville; F. W. Wells, Port Hope; D. W. McIntyre, Burks Falls; M. E. Hartley, Ottawa; John Easterbrook, Robinside; C. W. Sleep, Lindsay; L. M. WEST BOUND GRAIN NEW TARIFF RATES

Are Same Proportionately as Charged For Grain Moving East.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Reduced rates on grain and flour moving westward to Pacific Ports for export came into effect today. The new tariffs, which became operative yesterday in accordance with the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Sept. 3, are the same rates, proportioned to distance, as grain and flour would carry if moving eastward.

While up to a late hour tonight, the new tariffs had not been filed with the Railway Commission by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, it is understood that these printed tariffs have been actually transmitted from Winnipeg, and should be received here in the course of the next day or two. The delay in filing the new tariffs is believed to be due to the short interim which has elapsed since the issuance of the board's order, in which to prepare the necessary printed tariffs. The new rates, however, automatically come into effect today, if it is definitely stated at the Railway Commission, irrespective of the fact that the new tariffs have not yet been filed.

AT THE GRAND

COMING TO THE GRAND.

Starting tomorrow night promises to be a gala event in the history of Peterboro theatricals. The Young-Adams Stock Company, headed by H. Wilmot Young and Marjie Adams and supported by a clever company of 20 people and 7 high-class Vaudeville acts, will be in our midst for a six day engagement, with a Saturday matinee, commencing Thursday, September 17, an entire change of play and vaudeville nightly. The opening play will be that big New York sensational success, "The Road To Ruin", a play replete with thrills and abundance of comedy. In addition to this play there will be seven big vaudeville acts. You will certainly get more than your money's worth when you see this big show.

On Friday night "Dangerous Innocence" will be the offering. It is a play that compares favorably with such great productions as "The Big" or "The C[illegible] and Canar[illegible]." All new vaudeville will be seen between the acts. Saturday night is comedy night. A big double bill will be presented, consisting of the funny 3 act farce comedy, "Warned A Wife" and the roaring 4 act farce, "Easy Jim", with the funniest negro character on the stage today. Nothing but fun fast and furious. You will also get eight big vaudeville acts, making it the biggest comedy event of the season.

During the engagement Mr. Young desires to call your attention to a play that is entirely different to anything ever produced

How long is a Piece of Soap?

PERHAPS you have noticed how a cake of ordinary soap gets soft after it has been in the water a few times. The result is, the cake doesn't last any time—it just seems to "melt away."

PEERLESS ERASMIC never does that. It is a thoroughly aerated soap. Its texture is perfect—there is very little water left in it. It remains hard and firm right up to the last thin wafer. You save by using Erasmic, for a cake will outlast two or three cakes of ordinary soap.

HATTON WELL CAST IN "A SON OF HIS FATHER"

Raymond Hatton doesn't want to see an egg for the next year.

Playing the part of an awful [illegible] comes west for his health in Harold Bell Wright's "A Son of His Father," which was made on location in Southern Arizona, Hatton was required in many scenes to drink [illegible] and eat fried and boiled eggs. As the scenes had to be taken a number of times, the actor was required to go through the process again and again.

A special arrangement was finally made whereby Hatton was not forced to [illegible] eggs outside of working hours.

Featured players in "A Son of His Father," which was directed by Victor Fleming, are Bessie Love, Warren Baxter and Raymond Hatton.

The picture begins a three days' engagement on Sunday at the Capitol Theatre.

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE?

CLOSES TONIGHT

Are Parents People," as Paramount picture featuring Adolphe Menjou, Betty Bronson, Peter Pan, and Florence Vidor, made its appearance at the Capitol Theatre last Monday, will close its run this evening.

The picture was adapted for the screen from the Saturday Evening Post serial by Alice Duer Miller, who also wrote Manslaughter. The story is a delightful comedy-drama, in which Betty Bronson, the Peter Pan of the silver screen, appears as the daughter of parents suffering from a complete incompatibility. They quarrel about the smallest things, and Betty finds herself called upon to do something to bring them together.

The picture is real and is entertaining.

Tomlin on the merits of his pitching should have held the Orioles runless. Each of the Baltimore runs started with an error. Score:

WINNER TO MEET CHAMPION.

Not in a long while has there been more genuine interest in any bout locally than in the clash between Bobby Ebber, ex-champion, and Jackie Johnston, contender for the title. They met in a ten-rounder on Monday night at the Toronto Arena, and the winner will be matched with Foley for the championship. There was little to choose between them in a physical sense, as the above comparative measurements would indicate.

STRONG PLAYERS GET BENEFIT OF AUTOMATIC PULL

Results of Qualifying Round Predicted Before Games Were Played.

LADIES OPEN.

Improvement Evident Due to Greater Knowledge of the Course.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press).—With the automatic draw in operation, the leading players in the qualifying round of the twentieth Canadian ladies' open golf championship on Monday were paired against supposedly weaker players in the first round yesterday, and the results of the sixteen engagements in the first round were almost certain before the players commenced their matches, the main interest being taken in the leading players, particularly those who played over the course for the first time on Monday. Practically every one of the matches produced the expected winner, although in some cases the margin of victory was greater than anticipated, while in the others they were much closer than forecasted. Most of the players showed an improvement of several strokes over their rounds on Monday, the knowledge of the course being value for that difference, while other scores were greater owing to the fact that with a good lead to work on, the winners played a number of the holes in experimental fashion.

The best score for the first nine on Monday was a 41, while three of the players yesterday made the turn in 39, Miss Bell Hurd, Miss Helen Paget and Miss Madge Miller, of Grand Rapids. Miss Mackenzie took 40 for the outward journey, and Mrs. Fraser 41. Mrs. Hurd's playing on the first nine was exceptionally good, particularly her short game. On the nine holes she took but twelve putts, one on each of six holes and two on each of the other three. She had a stymie, laid by herself on the ninth, which cost her a stroke, while on the seventh she negotiated one laid by her opponent. Mrs. Ross of Beaconsfield. Miss Paget's short game was again almost perfect, while Miss Mackenzie and Miss Miller played close to perfect golf. Mrs. Fraser took matters somewhat easy as she always had a commanding lead.

The automatic draw makes the first round matches almost certain before play commences, but it makes for great struggles in the following rounds, and feature engagements will start to appear to-day.

As a result of the first round matches, seven of the ten American players advanced to the second round, two of them winning at the expense of fellow country-women, while the third defeat sustained by the United States was that suffered by Mrs. McMaster of Schenectady, who was paired with Mrs. Fraser. Of the nine Canadians left, Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto each have three representatives.

Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Maude Ross and Miss Paget, all of the Royal Ottawa Club, and all in the upper half of the draw, won by clear-cut margins. Mrs. Fraser and Mrs. Ross ending their engagements on the thirteenth green, and Miss Paget stopping at the eleventh. In the lower half there were also three matches that were over fairly quick. Mrs. Hurd winning 7 and 5, Miss Kinsella 5 and 4, and Miss Ada Mackenzie giving Miss Willo Gage practically no openings, and winning 9 and 8. Three of the four American winners in the upper half of the draw came through in easy manner, Miss Madge Miller of Grand Rapids and Mrs. F. C. Letts of Lake Forest winning 5 and 4, and Mrs. Chapin of Buffalo defeating Mrs. Bissell of the same city, 4 and 3. The other two matches in this section were close, Miss Kate Robertson of Beaconsfield defeating Miss Frances Sharp of Royal Ottawa, 2 and 1, after making the turn one down, while Mrs. Baker of Boston won from Miss Clifton of Buffalo, 2 and 1. Mrs. Baker was one up at the turn, but they were all square going to the fourteenth, Mrs. Baker, who was a scratch rating in the United States, is the least unknown of the visiting American players, and she is being watched closely. She had a numbed of good holes yesterday, and some that were not so good.

The lower half of the draw, which is the one that will produce the most surprises, brought out the closest matches of the day, five of the eight going as far as the sixteenth and one going the full length. Miss Evelyn Mills of York Downs was putting well yesterday against Mrs. Hanley, and after making the turn three down and losing the tenth staged a rally that carried the match to the sixteenth. Mrs. Hanley was out in 43. Mrs. F. J. Mulqueen of the Toronto Club, considered one of the strongest Canadian players, defeated Mrs. Brydges of Winnipeg, 4 and 2.

OPPOSE EXTENSION OF RACING SEASON

Driving Club Director Certain That Sufficient Provision Made.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Opposition to any extension of the horse racing season or construction of additional tracks in the city was voiced today by H. A. Argue, director of the Winnipeg Driving Club. "I feel strongly that 28 days racing in Winnipeg and vicinity is enough both for the good of the sport and the general interest of the community," he said. At present, six weeks of racing is conducted annually on Winnipeg tracks.

LADIES TEE-OFF IN GOLF CLASSIC

Forty-Nine Players Start Round Under Excellent Weather Conditions.

12 FROM STATES

Royal Ottawa Golf Club, Sept. 14.—Forty-nine players, including twelve from the United States, headed by Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd, of Philadelphia, American champion, teed off Monday afternoon in the qualifying round of the twentieth Canadian ladies' golf championship amid almost perfect conditions. The rain of the last two days was chased away by a brilliant sun and a fairly strong breeze from the northwest had very little effect on the play. The course was of a holding nature due to the rain but this was a vast improvement to the nature of the course last week when the fairways were almost of an asphalt nature.

The field is very strong as far as class is concerned although numerically smaller than usual. The title was lost by a Canadian in 1919 when Miss Ada MacKenzie of Mississauga triumphed, but Canada's chances of regaining the title are much brighter than usual owing to the presence of Mrs. W. G. Fraser of the Royal Ottawa Club, formerly Miss Alexa Stirling, an ex-Canadian and ex-American champion, par for the course is 78, 39 each way, but 80 will not be broken to-day, mainly because most of the players are playing over it for the first time on account of the rain of Saturday and Sunday which prevented practice.

INSIDE GOLF.

Maker of 51 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

By CHESTER HORTON

Golfers are told to avoid rigidity because it paralyzes the muscle action. As a matter of fact it does more than that. When the shoulders become rigid, for instance, in the first half of the back swing they have a tendency to stop turning to the right at just the time when they should turn, and instead the left shoulder drops downward toward the ball. This in turn causes the right shoulder to drop during the forward swing and the player has all manner of trouble with skied balls, with the club digging into the ground back of the ball, with slices, etc. The shoulders should start turning to the right in the back swing and the turning should continue, evenly and smoothly, until they are "wound up."

FAVORITES LEAD PARADE TOWARD TENNIS VICTORIES

Tilden Dropped a Set to Williams But Recovered Rapidly.

SOME UPSETS.

Chapin Put Out Dr. King, While Lott Eliminated Brugnon.

FOREST HILLS, N.Y., Sept. 16 (Canadian Press). — United States and foreign favorites, with two exceptions, continued their parade toward the national tennis championship on the turf courts of the West Side Tennis Club yesterday. Alfred H. Chapin, Jr., of Springfield, Mass., and George M. Lott, Jr., of Chicago, tripped up two seeded stars during the afternoon and tossed them into the realm of defeat.

The most startling upset of the tournament was furnished by young Chapin, who eliminated Dr. George King, of New York, 7—5, 6—1, 3—6, 6—3. Lott helped one of the foreign seed out of the tournament when he defeated the French Davis Cup star, Jacques Brugnon, 1—6, 6—2, 6—3, 6—2.

The playing through champion, William T. Tilden, was pushed hard and lost a set to Lucien E. Williams of Chicago. Tilden, however, worked his way into the third round bracket by winning the match, 6—2, 7—5, 3—6, 6—1.

Edward P. Herndon, former Princeton tennis star, also provided the gallery with a thrill when he took a set from Jean Borotra, the French flash, but the French won the match, 6—4, 6—3, 7—9, 6—4.

James O. Anderson, the Australian star; Manuel Alonso, the Spanish entrant, and Rene Lacoste, of France, also won their tilts today and will be seen in the third round tomorrow.

Each guest was given a tea towel to hem and embroidery their initial, the prize going to Mrs. Jos. Hoffman. Later Miss Gladys Brewster, dressed as a gypsy, arrived with a bag containing the gifts. The presentation was made by Miss Minnie Williams. A dainty luncheon was served, the table and dining-room being artistically decorated in the old gold and yellow.

Women Buy Coach Covers; Skirts Cause Cold Knees

LONDON, Sept. 16—(United Press).— Womans dress has reached the limit of brevity for the temperature zones of the world and has compelled shivering devotees of fashion to seek indirect ways of keeping themselves warm.

A pretty shot—taffetta coach cover invented in Paris is being bought by thousands of London women. They call it a coach cover when they get home but it is nothing more than an old fashioned bed quilt brushed up and is meant to keep the knees of smartly dressed women warm when they are sitting still in doors.

English Duke's German Inheritance Was Restored to Him After War.

TAKEN TO COURT

Motion for Hearing of Appeal Has Been Filed by Government.

BERLIN, Sept. 16. — (United Press).—The Duchy of Gotha, the only part of Germany owned by an Englishman will become German again if the appeal of the Bavaria Finance Minister to the Supreme Court at Leipzig is successful. The Duchy which comprises forty thousand acres and has many castles was restored to English Karle Edward Duke of Albany, in 1919, after being seized by the state at the time of the revolution. SANTAL MIDY Easy to Take—Quick to Relieve CATARRH of the BLADDER Each Capsule bears name SANTAL MIDY

RAIN DIDN'T STOP CROWD AT THE EX.

Everybody Happy in Spite of Drizzle or Downpour Last Night.

"Are we down-hearted? No!" the slogan that put new life into the veins of weary soldiers in the war days, might have been the motto also of the directors of the Peterboro Fair last night, as they watched the constant fall of rain that ushered in their 1925 show. But, despite the wet, it was a jovial crowd that took advantage of the free admission night to give the mammoth Midway the "once over." They viewed the smiling kewpie dolls, cheerful in a scanty ostrich feather outfit, even in such moist surroundings, they regarded the wonders of the cow with the corkscrew leg and the Siamese twin calves, they shivered over the gruesome wax features of Rube Burnam, the Alabama Wolf, and the blood-stained visage of Harry Tracy, and they had a good time in Jiggs' Bungalow, the house of mirth.

The cup that never goes dry, and responds with obliging liquid refreshment to the "goldy-goldy" incantation of its owner, was a source of wonderment, also the young gentleman who served as "barker" for this show, and has an entirely new line in the way of calls. He says "halla-halla" and "hi-aw-hi" at the top of his voice, with an agonized intonation that appears to hypnotize his audience, and he has a side-partner in a youth with a calliope whistle. The two call attention to the Coo-coo bird girl and the tattooed fat lady and the bluey-bluey show, along with a host of other attractions.

The organ of the merry-go-round, a real "go-laddie," as it used to be called, of the type never seen here before, a luxurious affair with wonderfully painted horses and a top to protect from the rain, played "Over the Waves," probably considering this an appropriate selection.

Over in the collection of side shows that adorn the Midway, Olly Flo and Happy Doe, the fat ladies, languished in seclusion, and the Cairo palace, a mind-reading and musical centre, showed a glistening silver front to the rain. Along the walk were lines of chance games, including one where a dark youth intoned mystic numbers, which were repeated by a gentleman below, and had something to do with the luck of the game.

Onions and Tomatoes.

It is a fascinating Midway this year. All empty spaces appear to be filled up. Where the barkers cease from talking, little tents pop up, filled with delectable smells. No one can imagine just how nice a big plate of sliced white onions, garnished with layers of ripe red tomato, and all ready to be consumed along with a sizzling Hamburg steak fritter, can look, until they patronize this year's Fair. There are drinks for the thirsty and ice cream sandwiches for the warm and hot dogs for the chilly-minded. You can go for a canter on the merry-go-round or for a roundabout ride on the "Merry Mix Up," or you can spend some small change in return for a kewpie or a rug or a brand new knife. There is something doing every minute. The Fair this year, at least as far as the Midway is concerned, has more the appearance of a real carnival than ever before, and no one can miss a good time there.

Although the Al Sweet Singing Band did not perform last evening, on account of the very bad weather and small crowd, the men were on hand, a snappy-looking outfit, all ready for to-day's programme. The Caledonian Pipe Band, led by Pipe-Major J. Smith, braved the rain and played for about an hour in the small stand near the eastern entrance, entertaining their audience with real Scotch music from real Scotch pipes, played by real Scotch musicians.

An adjunct to the cheerful atmosphere of the Fair is the really wonderful arrangement of electric lights. Overhead are myriads of colored globes, making a beautiful illumination, the main entrance is topped by a gorgeous collection of green lights and everywhere through out the grounds are hundreds of globes, giving a truly cosmopolitan and big city air to the grounds.

A SIGNIFICANT UNION

The Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, and his new cabinet colleague, Hon. Vincent Massey, are seen above as they appeared upon the occasion of a recent visit paid to Hart House, Toronto, by the former. The inclusion of Mr. Massey in the Liberal cabinet as minister without porfolio is doubly significant in view of the fact that he is president of the Massey-Harris Company, Limited, one of the firms which it was said in 1923 would be in danger of being ruined by the tariff reductions on agricultural implements introduced by Hon. James Robb on behalf of the Liberal government.

Prince of Wales Witnesses Spirited Affray Between Two Men.

LOS ANDES, Aconcagua, Chile, Sept. 16.—(Canadian Press Cable).—A storm raging in the Cordillera prevented the Prince of Wales from crossing the Andes yesterday morning. He was on his way to Argentina, but had to turn back.

The Prince left Valparaiso Monday night after some delay owing to heavy snow in the mountains, and reached Los Andes, the Chilean terminus of the trans-Andean Railway, about 6.30 Tuesday morning.

Rain was falling heavily, but the line was reported clear. As soon as the special train began to take the grade the rain changed to snow, and at Juncal Station, on the Argentine border, 6,750 feet altitude, which was reached about 10 o'clock, it became evident that the train was not going to get through without considerable difficulty. It proceeded, however, and about 12 miles from the summit of the pass a gang was sent ahead to clear the road, while the train was backed into one of the numerous shelters constructed on the mountainside as a protection against blocked lines by the fall of masses of snow.

Shortly after the train returned to Juncal, with the idea of attaching a snow plow, but it was finally decided to go back to Los Andes in the hope of making a fresh start this morning. Snow had been falling steadily all morning, and the pilot train, which set out a short time before the Royal one, got through, but snow slides block the road between the two trains. Los Andes was reached at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Prince witnessed quite a thrilling incident while walking in the streets of Los Andes after the return of his train. He was passing a shop, but stopped to watch an affray between two men. One of them drew a knife and stabbed the other. The wounded man fell to the ground, but, rising quickly, hurled a large stone at his assailant, then collapsed and was taken to a hospital. The man with the knife was arrested.

Though Lapp sorcerers once used magic drums to cure disease and control spirits, only about seventy such drums are now known to be in existence.

BREAK THE RECORD IN POULTRY SHOW

Many New Visitors Add to String Brought by Standbys.

"We're breaking all records this year," was George Paxman's enthusiastic report of the poultry show as he and his assistants finished cooping their exhibits this morning. "Our poultry building is overcrowded. We've got coops laid along the aisles, which have been so narrowed they will be easily crowded. All the local and district poultry men are with us again and we have quite a number of new exhibitors. Among them are Frank W. Palmateer, of Newmarket, who is featuring light Brahmas, the first time birds have been shown in that class. The Rolyat Poultry Farm, of Newcastle, formerly of Bircheliffe, Toronto, has many entries in various classes, George P. Randall, of Toronto, has a big display of Cornish game."

And so Mr. Paxman ran over his list. "Look here," he pointed, "we have 43 entries in Barred Rocks, we've never had anything like that number before; forty in White Rocks; twenty-seven light Brahmas; White Wyandottes are heavy again, and the water fowl are something fierce, was "Paxey's" emphatic phrasing in describing the long rows of cooped geese and ducks. C. H. Curtis, of Warkworth, Lorne Hutchison of Warkworth and Van Allen of Stirling, are big exhibitors in this class. The flocks of E. Moncrief, of North Monaghan are also heavily represented.

INSURANCE MEN OFF TO MEETING

Thirteen Agents of Sun Life in This District Are Club Members.

HONORS FOR ONE.

In these days when many records are being broken, it is interesting to note the progress of one of the leading life assurance companies. During this week the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada holds a convention at St. Andrews, N.B., at which the leading producers of the company, east of Manitoba, will meet. In Central Ontario district no less than thirteen of the company's representatives have earned the right to attend the convention. This means that the company has thirteen Macaulay Club members in this district, all of whom are numbered amongst the big producers in the field.

The following are the names of the agents who with J. F. H. Wallace, the local manager, and W. H. Hill, left for the east last night, where they will join the main Sun Life party at Montreal, and proceed by special train to their destination: Messrs. J. D. Cameron, Peterborough; F. J. Hickey, Peterborough; J. F. Hinchey, Belleville; F. W. Wells, Port Hope; D. W. McIntyre, Burks Falls; M. E. Hartley, Oshawa; John Easterbrook, Roblindale; C. V. Sleep, Lindsay; L. M. Parks, Trenton; Wm. Harkness, Sundridge; R. A. Armstrong, Zephyr; J. S. Johnston, Grafton, and S. J. Phillips, Madoc.

At the convention, Mr. Cameron of Peterborough will be presented with a gold chain, by virtue of the fact that he has qualified ten years in succession for Macauley Club membership. This is an honor which might well be cherished by any man in the life assurance business.

WEST BOUND GRAIN NEW TARIFF RATES

Are Same Proportionately as Charged For Grain Moving East.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16 (Canadian Press).—Reduced rates on grain and flour moving westward to Pacific Ports for export came into effect today. The new tariffs, which became operative yesterday in accordance with the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Sept. 2, are the same rates, proportioned to distance, as grain and flour would carry if moving eastward.

While up to a late hour tonight, the new tariffs had not been filed with the Railway Commission by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, it is understood that these printed tariffs have been actually transmitted from Winnipeg, and should be received here in the course of the next day or two. The delay in filing the new tariffs is believed to be due to the short interim which has elapsed since the issuance of the board's order, in which to prepare the necessary printed tariffs. The new rates, however, automatically come into effect today, if it is definitely stated at the Railway Commission, irrespective of the fact that the new tariffs have not yet been filed.

WASTED MILLIONS.

Monies From German Reparations Absorbed in Maintenance of Armies.

BERLIN, Sept. 16—The Boersen Courier, commenting on the report of S. Parker Gilbert, agent-general for reparations, on the first year's payments of reparations under the Dawes plan, published yesterday, asserts that about 214,000,000 gold marks of the sum paid by Germany was wasted on unproductive expenditures.

"These wasted millions," the paper declared, comprise about 188,000,000 marks which went for the expenses for the armies of occupation, and about 26,000,000 marks spent on various control commissions.

AT THE ROYAL.

JACK LONDON'S CLASSIC, 'WHITE FANG,' WITH STRONG-HEART, AT ROYAL THURS.

The swish of snow-shoes, the crunch of the fluffy white blanket, the biting cold, the howl of the Wolf Pack and the heart of a great dog, half wolf, half husky, run through the story of "White Fang" Jack London's powerful drama of Alaska, which gives "Strongheart" his greatest role since first that four-footed thoroughbred stepped into the public heart. Director Lawrence Trimble and Jane Murfin, who wrote the adaptation, have translated here Jack London at his highest pitch to the screen in a background which for beauty and awe-inspiring magnificence has seldom if ever been equalled. Even to the dramatic introduction of the wolves, circling around the halted sleds of the trappers, enticing the dogs away to kill them, and tearing out of the night around the camp fire where men snatched broken rest in the icy gloom, the production is as faithful as can possibly be imagined. "Strongheart" is glorious in the title role, and the human elements of the cast are equally fine. Theodore von Eltz, Ruth Dwyer take outstanding parts. It is by far the best story Strongheart has ever had.

AT THE GRAND

COMING TO THE GRAND.

Starting tomorrow night promises to be a gala event in the history of Peterboro theatricals. The Young-Adams Stock Company, headed by H. Wilmot Young and Marjie Adams and supported by a clever company of 20 people and 7 high-class Vaudeville acts, will be in our midst for a six day engagement, with a Saturday matinee, commencing Thursday, September 17, an entire change of play and vaudeville nightly. The opening play will be that big New York sensational success, "The Road To Ruin", a play replete with thrills and abundance of comedy. In addition to this play there will be seven big vaudeville acts. You will certainly get more than your money's worth when you see this big show.

On Friday night "Dangerous Innocence" will be the offering. It is a play that compares favorably with such great productions as "The Bat" or "The C[illegible] and Canar[illegible]." All new vaudeville will be seen between the acts. Saturday night is comedy night. A big double bill will be presented, consisting of the funny 3 act farce comedy, "Wanted A Wife" and the roaring 1 act farce, "Razor Jim", with the funniest negro character on the stage today. Nothing but fun fast and furious. You will also get eight big vaudeville acts, making it the biggest comedy event of the season.

During the engagement Mr. Young desires to call your attention to a play that is entirely different to anything ever produced in Peterboro, one that will make you sit up and take notice. It will keep you guessing from start to finish. So when "The Veiled Woman" is announced secure your seats early as hundreds are always turned away for this big event. Only one performance of this play will be given, and under no circumstance will any person under 18 years of age be admitted. The Young-Adams Co. have the exclusive Canadian rights to this big sensation and the author has a clause in his contract that you must be 18 to see the play.

AT THE CAPITOL

HATTON WELL CAST IN "A SON OF HIS FATHER"

Raymond Hatton doesn't want to see an egg for the next year.

Playing the part of an invalid who comes west for his health in Harold Bell Wright's "A Son of His Father" which was made on location in Southern Arizona, Hatton was required in many scenes to drink egg-nog and eat fried and boiled eggs. As the scenes had to be taken a number of times, the actor was required to go through the process again and again.

A special arrangement was finally made whereby Hatton was not forced to eat eggs outside of working hours.

Featured players in 'A Son of His Father," which was directed by Victor Fleming, are Bessie Love, Warren Baxter and Raymond Hatton. The picture begins a three days' engagement on Thursday at the Capitol Theatre.

"ARE PARENTS PEOPLE" CLOSES TONIGHT

"Are Parents People," the Paramount picture featuring Adolphe Menjou, Betty Bronson ("Peter Pan") and Florence Vidor, which opened at the Capitol Theatre last Monday, will close its run there this evening.

The picture was adapted for the screen from The Saturday Evening Post serial by Alice Duer Miller, who also wrote "Manslaugher." The story is a domestic comedy drama, in which Betty has the role of an only daughter whose parents suffer from a case of incompatibility. They quarrel about the smallest things, and Betty is at her wit's end to know what to do with them. She scolds them tries to shame them and then decides to give them a mutual worry," which she does by presumably falling for a long-haired movie "sheik."

It's funny, it's real and it's entertaining.

Lawrence Gray, Paramount's greatest "find" since the discovery of Betty Bronson herself, heads the supporting cast.

Since many persons get lost in the woods and perish, Walter J. Perry, a forest ranger of the Rockies, advises the lost winter traveller to go only down hill.

How long is a Piece of Soap?
PERHAPS you have noticed how a cake of ordinary soap gets soft after it has been in the water a few times. The result is, the cake doesn't last any time—it just seems to "melt away."
PEERLESS ERASMIC never does that. It is a thoroughly milled soap. Its texture is perfect—there is very little water left in it. It remains hard and firm right to the last thin wafer. You save by using Erasmic, for a cake will outlast two or three cakes of ordinary soap.

POLICE SEIZE FIGHTING MAN IN PETERBORO'

Detective Carey and Constable Wheeler Figure in Thrilling Capture.

STOLEN CAR.

Sarnia Man Has Been Returned to Stand Trial There.

Joseph E. Lachappell, wanted in Sarnia on charges of car theft, and of non-support of his wife and children, and captured in Peterborough by Detective Carey and Constable Wheeler of the city police force, has been returned to Sarnia.

From information received from Sarnia on Sunday last, the police here came to the conclusion that Lachappelle, who is a French-Canadian, would be found in East City.

A house there was searched with the discovery that the bird had flown—the means of locomotion being a car bearing a U. S. license number. Later the police saw at the intersection of George and Hunter streets, a car and driver, both of which appeared to resemble the objects of their search. The man when questioned, denied that he was the person sought but was ordered to accompany the officers to the police station. He appeared to be willing to comply, but when nearing the city buildings he suddenly increased the speed of his car and shot away, with Wheeler standing on the footboard.

Carey set out in pursuit in the police car, and a scene similar to those enacted on the movies' screen every other night was staged on the streets of Peterborough. Lachappell frantically lashed out with his free hand at Wheeler in the endeavor to shake him off. Wheeler made strenuous efforts to grapple with his quarry and stop the car. Wheeler won out. The car was stopped and the two officers escorted Lachappell to the police station, where his identity was fully established by means of certain tattoo marks on his body.

Sarnia was advised of Lachappelle's arrest and a high county constable came here and took him away.

The following is Lachappell's record:

At Toronto, December 27, 1916, sentenced to 18 months in the Ontario Reformatory for bigamy and desertion of His Majesty's Forces.

May 11, 1920, four charges of theft and receiving. Sentenced to four year in Kingston Penitentiary.

October 27, 1922, released on ticket of leave. The ticket of leave branch now holds a warrant for his apprehension. He is wanted in Brampton for shopbreaking and theft.

The U. S. car in which he was travelling when caught in Peterboro was stolen, and he is also charged with having stolen a car in this city.

OVERSEAS TRADE IS AIM OF KING

Premier Opens Maritime Campaign With Plea to Build Markets.

AMHERST, N.S., Sept. 16—(Canadian Press).—Premier King opened his Maritime campaign last night with an urgent plea for the development of the overseas trade. "Build up trade in British markets and in the markets of the world," he declared. "Build up larger markets. That is the thing to build up the Maritime Provinces. And our policies should be developed to build up this part of Canada." He defined the policy of the Government in these terms:

"Development of natural resources,

"Lowering duties on implements of production,

"Lowering duties on necessaries of life,

"Reducing the cost of living,

"Developing trade with the Empire,

"Extending Canadian trade to all quarters of the globe."

The Premier spoke of the trade treaty concluded with the West Indies, and of the opening which he said it offered to Maritime development. The Liberals had introduced British preference. But Mr. Meighen, so the Prime Minister went on, would not have this preference until Great Britain put up her tariff walls against other countries.

There was some passing reference to the Civil Service Commission. Hon. E. M. MacDonald, Minister of Defence, had referred to the creation of the Commission as an absolute abandonment of the principles of responsible government, although agreeing that certain classes of those appointed should be made by the Commission Premier King followed up the point by taking the ground that with regard to a large number of appointments, the Commission might say whether the applicant was qualified, but the Government should have the responsibility for the appointment.

PRINCE MAROONED BY SNOW STORM

Andean Railway is Blocked By Landslide in the Mountains.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 16. — (Canadian Press).—The Prince of Wales was still marooned at Los Andes, Chilean terminus of the Trans-Andean Railway, to-day. He was caught there yesterday when on his way back to Argentine from his visit to Chile by heavy snows in the mountains and a big landslide which blocked the railway line.

The Prince has not yet decided whether he will return to Vina Del Mar or make a new attempt to cross the Andes. The pilot train which precided the Royal train, and which was cut off from it by the snowslide, returned late last night to Junoal after some difficulty. Bad weather continues.

BATTALION REUNION FIXED FOR FRIDAY

Visitor Has Aready Arrived —21st Men Get Together at Banquet.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Armouries last night to make final arrangements for the 21st Battalion's seventh annual re-union, which is being held in the Empress Hotel on Friday night. Every member is anticipating a good attendance. Telegrams and letters are coming from all parts of Ontario, and a chap blew in today from North Bay to book his seat at the table of plenty and look over the attractions, such as "Pommes de Chateau de la Haye," instead of bully beef and biscuits. All trains will be met and highways watched by a large reception committee, when the visitors will be escorted to the Armouries, it being the 21st Battalion headquarters. The parade will fall in at 7.30, and will parade, headed by the Caledonian Pipe Band, to the Cenotaph at the G. W. V. A., where a wreath will be placed in recognition of dead comrades. All complimentary ticket holders are asked to be on hand at the Armouries to participate in this ceremony, from where the advance will be made on the Empress Hotel.

The daily orders, as published, are to be strictly enforced:

(1) The attention of the chairman has been drawn to advices received from the Ministry of Food that until further notice G.R.O. No. 9 affecting the supply of rations has been cancelled and all ranks are therefore cautioned that under no circumstances will any rank be allowed to leave this re-union without having first consumed at least double the quantity set forth in the regular scale of rations. No excuses will be taken, as the Q.M.'s stores refuse to dispose of any more rations other than through the proper channels.

(2) The menu has been prepared by the Q.M.G.'s Branch, G.H.Q., who have also cancelled all kitchen fatigues, having arranged for an unlimited supply of "Mamselles."

LIBERAL LEADER CAMPAIGNING IN HISTORIC LOCALITY CITES ADVANTAGES OF A LOW TARIFF

Maritimes To Be Made Prosperous By Getting Wider Markets Near Home.

LOWER FREIGHT RATES

Setting of Concourse is in Settlement First Founded By Portuguese.

ST. PETER'S, N.S., Sept. 17.—(Canadian Press). — Premier King continued his Maritime campaign yesterday with a meeting held by the seashore. During the whole campaign, the Prime Minister has spoken in no spot more picturesque, nor in one more closely associated with stirring days of early Canadian history. Close by, the Portuguese founded the first settlement of San Pedro from which St. Peter's gets its name. The view from the open air platform swept beyond where the Atlantic links up with the Lakes of Bras D'Or, over seas where English privateers from Canso once harried the French shipping of old Port Toulouse, and it was to men "who go down to the sea and make their living on the waters" (as one speaker put it) that argument was largely directed.

Hon. E. M. Macdonald, Minister of Defence, first pressed the point with reference to reductions made by the Government in the import duties on articles used by fishermen, declaring that higher protection under a Conservative Government would increase the duties again. Premier King carried the point farther by emphasizing as he emphasized at Amherst, that in the development of export trade lay the way of the Maritimes. "How can the Maritimes be made prosperous?" he asked. "We say by getting wider markets near your door." He did not think that Ontario and Quebec, with their large manufacturing centres, offered the field to the Maritimes that was offered in export trade. The Maritimes were better situated than any part of Canada to participate in overseas trade. "What you need," he said, "is to have a lowering of ocean freight rates on your products. We had the courage to attack the problem. We have not solved it yet but we intend to keep at it."

The Dog Show Is a Bear! Trot the Pup Down South

If you have a dog entered in the Dog Show, hitch the harness on him early Friday morning and trot him down to his place. If your pup isn't entered, take him down anyhow and let him meet his friends. The dog show opens to the public at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. Three hundred and seventy-five dogs are entered, putting Peterboro in second place for size in the Province of Ontario. Only the Canadian National Exhibition is ahead, and Chairman Merrill has his eye on even that, with a view to beating it next year.

Friday and Saturday are the dog days. Don't miss them.

"She receives them from my guide and passes them on to me," he added.

KELLOGG CAUSE OF TROUBLES OF MR. SAKLATVALA

Communist Member Says That U.S. Secretary is to Blame For Revoking Passport.

IS DISAPPOINTED.

Two Other M.P.'s Will Now Go to Meeting With British Delegation.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—(Canadian Press.)—Shapurji Saklatvala, Communist member of Parliament barred from the United States as a member of the British delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Conference in Washington, blames Secretary of State Kellogg for his troubles.

Formally notified this morning that his passport visa had been revoked, the Communist M.P. declared that Mr. Kellogg, through his association with British peers and others of their class while serving as Ambassador in London, had become "imbued with the petticoated aristocratic ideas of Great Britain to such an extent that he still clings to them, even in America."

Mr. Saklatvala said he had not decided yet whether he would go to Canada to take part in the sessions to be held in Ottawa. "Politically," he remarked, "I am a much disappointed man."

Sir Robert Bird and Col. H. C. Woodcock, two of those who withdrew because Saklatvala was included, now announce that in view of the American action they had reconsidered thier decisions and would sail with the party on Saturday.

'Fair and Warm' Says Probs Helping To Make It 30,000

Here is that good weather the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition has been looking for. Last year it was like looking through the wrong end of the telescope but this year it was held right. Mr. Probs, who was so good yesterday, to-day promises that Friday will be "Fair and Warm," and The Examiner's own weather man says "Fair and a little warmer." That settles it. Make Friday another day to be remembered—by yourself and by the Fair Directors. Nine thousand two hundred and ninety-one people went there yesterday, and 9,291 came away boosters for the best Fair Peterboro has ever had.

Mr. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Opposition party, journeyed to Truro this morning on the same train from the Eastern part of the Province where the Premier spoke at St. Peter's, and the Conservative leader at Stellarton. Mr. Meighen proceeded northward to Moncton and Mr. King southward to Halifax.

Exhibition Shatters Its Previous Record For Any Single Day

Directors Bask in Sunshine and Look For Attainment of 30,000 Mark—Fred Holmes Announces a Gain of 5,000 in Attendance—Better To-day.

COUNTRY COUSINS EXPECTED FRIDAY.

Exhibition directors deserting their farms and their stores and shops basked in this morning's sunlight, softened by a September haze, and warmed themslevs in the comfort that comes to men wrapped up in their hobbies. For to every director the Exhibition is a hobby which bears its rewards in the opportunities it offers for public service to city and country.

From the treasurer's office Fred Holmes announced an attendance gain of 5,000 over the corresponding day last year. The count at the gates yesterday totalled 9,291 as against 4,247a year ago, and with that splendid beginning and a promise of fair weather for the rest of the week the directors permitted their hopes to soar toward a total gate of at least 30,000 for the week.

Children's Day was a fine success and hundreds of the little folk, remaining with their mothers for the evening performance at which they were joined by their fathers, trudged home last night with the Sandman close at their heels. Friday will probably bring their little country cousins, many of whom, it was reported, chose Friday for their day at the fair because the Saturday holiday would allow them an extra hour's rest in bed, if they needed it, after the fatigue of their fun at the Exhibition.

More Than 4,000 Lights

More than 4,000 electric light bulbs strung by the Utilities Commission's workmen comprise the lighting of the Exhibition plant. Mr. Harry Beatty of the Commission's electrical department said there were more lights than ever set up, and a distinctly enhancing effect was obtained by streamers of colored lights—blue, green, red and yellow,—lending a touch of fairyland beneath last night's grateful stars.

Cattle Better.

Cattle exhibits are slightly in excess of last year. The dairy and beef classes are well filled, and the accommodation is crowded as usual, but if several of the exhibitors who were unable to prepare their herds for this year's competition had entered their stock, there would have been no room in the barns and stables.

Among the new exhibitors is Fred F. Field, whose pure bred Jerseys from the Field Lodge Farm near Roseneath are a feature of the dairy class. Bertwin Blackburn of Uxbridge, has about twenty Aberdeen-

Negro "Real Semites" Plan New Synagogue In Chicago

CHICAGO, Ill., September 17.—(Special, Canadian Press.) — A congregation of 300 negroes is planning the erection of a synagogue here, it became known today, claiming they are "the real Semites." The congregation is in charge of two negro Rabbis, David Lazayus and Caino Stiffom.

Services are conducted for the most part in Hebrew, at the temple of the Gospel of the Kingdom, a branch of the New York congregation, which is said to number several thousand members.

Plans for a synagogue were disclosed when the Rabbis were accused of soliciting funds under false pretences, but were released when they proved their cause real.

HISTORY MADE AT EXHIBITION

Wednesday Was Biggest Day Known, Far Ahead of Others.

COUNT HONEST.

Wednesday made history for the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition, when more people passed through the gates than in any single day in previous years. The next highest day was the last of the 1924 Exhibition, when the total was 8,686. Yesterday, there was a total of 9,291, made up as follows:

Paid Adults 4,873
Paid Passes 280
Paid Children 4,140

The paid passes represent persons who pay a blanket entrance price to permit their entering to attend to business, and because of the payment they are entitled to be counted. Free passes, directors' passes, and members' tickets are not counted. If those who entered on these special tickets and passes had been counted yesterday, probably a couple of thousand could have been added to the total, but it is the aim of Peterboro Exhibition Board to give an honest indication of the number who come to VISIT the Exhibition, and in this they are leading the way for a great many Fairs in Ontario where everything is counted.

Men Carrying Hand Bags To Hold Odds and Ends

LONDON, September 17. — (United Press.) — Men of London have taken to carrying hand bags, mainly of tan leather—corresponding to the "catch-all" of womankind. The handbag for man is designed to carry pipes, tobacco, cigarettes, a knife, clean collar, key ring, and the usual miscellaneous articles with him, instead of in his pockets.

Vaudeville Performance Given For First Time to Big Audience.

BAND MAKES HIT.

Children's Races and Sports Well Patronized in the Afternoon.

Children, over four thousand of them, swarmed over the Exhibition Grounds yesterday. They wandered through the buildings, collecting souvenirs, wherever possible, they patronized the shows on the Midway and teased the giant lady in the checked gingham dress and bonnet, who advertised the "Law and Outlaw" side-show, they filled themselves with ice cream cones and lemonade and popcorn, and they congregated, a jolly bunch, on the grand-stand, to watch the vaudeville programme and listen to the band and see other little boys and girls take part in the programme of races. These youngsters are discriminating. They like thrills. "Aw, anybody could do that," they said, of a mild trapeze stunt, and "That's more like it," they applauded, as the performers went through a more dangerous section of their act.

Attractive Programme.

The attractions in front of the grand stand are all good this year. The headliner is, of course, Al Sweet's Singing Band, a group of musicians, who are talented in the instrumental and vocal line alike. They made a splendid impression on their audiences yesterday, and were accorded enthusiastic and prolonged encores, particularly for the short programme with which they preluded the evening performance. Clad in their snappy hussar uniforms, with braid-decked bosoms and white-lined capes, they make a very fine appearance. Their costume for the afternoon programme was of the outing variety, with cream flannel trousers and dark coats. They play beautifully, with a smooth execution and a soft, bright tone that strongly resembles orchestral music, rather than the usual blare of a band. They have a finished technique that makes their music of whatever variety, a real delight, and they play with a verve and vim that leaves an impression of real enjoyment on their part as well as on that of their hearers. Their singing also is splendid, with the same atmosphere of skilful ease as that which surrounds their instrumental music. A volume of bright, soft tone is evident, with a clear enunciation that makes every word apparent at once.

Yesterday afternoon, the band confined itself principally to popular airs, suited to the taste of their juvenile audience. Last night, in their initial programme, they sang several times, giving choral solos in the Dudley Buck arrangement of "Annie Laurie," with an encore in the whimsical "What does the Pussy Cat Say?" and singing intervals in the descriptive number, composed by Mr. Sweet, "The Circus Parade," a selection that appealed strongly to the crowd, with its imitation of various portions of a circus parade. They played also a charming medley of popular songs.

Good Vaudeville.

The vaudeville programme before the grand stand included seven acts, all of them clean and entertaining. The La Noles have a clever novelty trapeze act; the Apollo Trio, "A Study in Bronze," with the three performers gilded from head to foot, was an exceptionally good turn, the crowd applauding vigorously the exceptional skill of the trio who formed various groups of the "living statue" type; Tice's Dogs, a troupe of trained canines, with an Airedale as the king-pin and a tiny terrier as the pet of the bunch, were splendidly-trained small dogs that did a number of tricks, much to the delight of their young audience; the D. Libberto Brothers, a European

No Longer Will They Show Chaplin Getting His Throat Cut..

LONDON, September 17. (Special.) — (United Press.) — No longer will Londoners be shocked by posters showing Charlie Chaplin having his throat cut with a comedy knife, a committee of the Bill Posters' Association to-day decided that this particular advertisement of the "Gold Rush," now showing here, must be banned.

No reason was given but presumably the poster was frowned on as an incitement to violence.

The authorities of Zakho have been instructed to assist the refugees as much as possible.

It is estimated that 8,000 Goyan Christians have been forcibly turned out of their homes by the Turks.

Prohibition Agent' Is Opprobrious Name In Bowery—Insulted One Shot Saloon Keeper and Wrecked Saloon

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (United Press).—You can call a man a good many names in the Bowery if you do it with a smile, but "Prohibition Agent" is not one of them. In the years that have made New York's famous street known all over the world, men of many nations have called one another many things in many languages without resorting to gun or dirk, but that was before "Prohibition Agent" became a term of reproach there.

Benjamine Josephson, 34, who has a saloon at No. 185 Bowery apparently did not realize the danger, and according to the police, he called John Cassidy, 40, a laborer, a "Prohibition Agent" yesterday.

The net result is that he is in Gouverneur Hospital with bullet wounds in his back and left hand, the large plate glass of his saloon is a wreck, and Cassidy is in jail.

GOVERNMENT SHOWS PHEASANT EXHIBIT

W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P., Obtained Interesting Addition to Exhibition This Year.

W. H. Bradburn's contribution to the Exhibition attractions is a large cage of 34 English ringneck pheasants in charge of a representative of the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries. It is prominently placed in the tent allotted to the vegetable display, and no person can fail to see it. These birds were part of the Provincial Department's exhibit at Toronto, and through the request of Mr. Bradburn were obtained for Peterboro to educate the public in the protection of these game birds. They were grown on the Government's preserve at Eugenie Falls, an Island formed by the Hydro-Electric Commission's power dam. Thousands of these pheasants have been hatched during the last three years of the operation of this branch of the Department's activities toward the restocking of the Province with game birds and fish. Their eggs are distributed among the Fish and Game Associations of the Province, are hatched by farmers' hens and allowed to wander off to the nearest woods, where they have been establishing themselves in many sections of the Province. Some of them have been seen around this locality since the local Game Protective Association obtained settings of eggs and placed them with farmers in the nearby townships.

The English ringneck is a pretty bird, especially the male, but lacks the richness of coloring of the golden pheasant's plumage.

LIBERAL-CONSERVATIVE MEETING HELD IN THEATRE OF LINDSAY WAS WELL ATTENDED BY ENTHUSIASTS

Thomas H. Stinson, K. C., Tendered Unanimous Nomination as Party's Choice.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, of Guelph Charged Government With Extravagance.

LINDSAY, Sept. 17.—At a convention of the Liberal-Conservatives of Victoria and Haliburton held in Academy Theatre yesterday, Thomas H. Stinson, K.C., of Lindsay, was tendered the unanimous nomination as the party's choice in the Federal election. The convention was largely attended, and the capacity of the theatre was taxed to its utmost. It was reminiscent of the days of the late Sir Sam Hughes, while the same old-time enthusiasm was in evidence.

Mr. James Mark, M.L.A., North Victoria, acted as chairman, and prior to the convention proper the officers of the Conservative Association of the riding were elected as follows:

President: F. R. Wilford.

Vice-Presidents: Mrs. J. Alton, Kirkfield; C. D. Logan, Bobcaygeon; Joseph Beatty, Omemee; Ed. Rogrs, Minden.

Secretary: S. M. Scott.

Treasurer: James Boxall.

The speakers of the day were Hon. Hugh Guthrie, of Guelph; Mrs. Howard Fallis, and the condidate.

Mr. Guthrie in his opening remarks, criticized the policy of the King Government as well as its policy of inaction during its tenure of office. The case Mr. King has to present to the people was not one, he said, that would create enthusiasm. The Liberal conventions throughout the country were tame and the leaders were dejected in spirit. The government claimed a reduction in the national debt, which is not true, and like other statements was mere camouflage. Mr. Guthrie claimed that the finances of the Dominion were in a hopeless mess. Taxation had been increased with leaps and bounds and the people had been forced to leave the country. The King Government had increased taxes by $47,000,000 until there was no avenue of taxation left. Every other country had reduced taxation but Canada. The Government had spent money like water for hotels in Canada and Paris and clubs in England. Waste and extravagance had taken place in every department. Salaries of government officials had been boosted, but not those of mail carriers. Sir Henry Drayton had introduced an Economy Bill to curb extravagance, but the Liberals and Progressives, Mr. Guthrie claimed, opposed the measure, and so did Mr. Thurston, Progressive member for Victoria and Haliburton. Mr. Thurston had sat as hard and as fast in the House as a Grit. He supported the King Government on every critical vote. He never objected to the orgy of extravagance. The Progressives are more sure of Mackenzie King than the Grits are. The Premier has only to smile across at the Progressives and they swing into line. It has been a farce.

No Marraige Ceremony Unless Bride Is Veiled

LONDON, Sept. 16.—Ruislip Parish Church now owns a bridal veil for the compulsory use of any bride-to-be who, thoughtlessly or otherwise, fails to bring her own.

Announcing this unique addition to the church's parsphernalia, the Rev. E. Cornwall Jones, Vicar of Ruislip, states:

"As it is the rule of the Church that all brides shall be 'decently apparelled,' which means 'that they should wear a veil, a suitable veil is provided for those who are being married in what is called a 'going away costume.'

"This can be adjusted in the belfry before the ceremony.

"A hat is not a suitable thing to be blessed, as it is the bride and bridegroom that we bless, and not their clothes."

IS PARTY'S CHOICE.
